JOHN F. SWIFT.

Summary of His Speech in Pendleton Last Evening—Illogical and Misleading Throughout—The Audience Greatly Dis- satisfied.

Hon. John F. Swift, the great Repub- lican gun, who it had been alleged was to demolish and discomfit the Democratic hosts and turn them all into the Re- publican ranks with his eloquence and logic, arrived last evening and delivered him- self of his great speech at the Opera House.

He said the good times we have been enjoying for the past twenty-five years was due to the high tariffs imposed dur- ing the war. We had no "good times" prior to the war, because there was no practically free trade. He admitted that the tariff laws had built up large fortunes. Whoever, he said, manufactures on a large scale, is certain to make a good deal of money—and he will do so whether engaged in manufacturing in Lowell, Massachusetts, or in Manchester, England.

He did not explain why, this being the case, laws to favor this fortunate class of people were necessary.

He said it was better to have the "3 fortunes go to Americans, men of our own nation than to Englishmen.

The comfort and well being of all poor people depend on one word—employment. When nearly all people are employed we have "good times;" when less people are employed we have "dull times;" and when people are largely unemployed we have "hard times."

He forgot to say in connection with this, that a far greater per centage of people have been unemployed under the high than under the low tariffs.

Last year, he said, we bought sixteen million dollars' worth of foreign wool, and forty-four million dollars' worth of foreign cloth. If this had all been raised and manufactured in this country, all persons could have had employment.

There were 200,000 idle people, tramps, in the country, who cost the people $125 a year each, or an aggregate of $25,000,000. This comes out of the pockets of the people. Well-to-do people like him- self paid no attention to them, but they lived chiefly off people of small means, by sponging and pilfering.

The speaker dwelt a considerable time upon this great burden upon society, and seemed to be trying to argue that a high tariff, if it only could be made high enough, would at once set all the tramps and loafers and vagabonds in the country at work.

He went on to draw quite a glowing picture of the beauties and comforts of wealth. He liked to see people live well and expensively. He did not want to go back to the plain old times, when nearly all people were poor and could not enjoy the luxuries and elegancies of life.

The speaker then alluded to the Presi- dent's message and characterized it as a peculiar document, because it told Con- gress what ought to be done. The people of Pendleton, through Col. Irish, had learned about the message at the very outset of the campaign.

The special interest of President Cleveland's friends, the speaker asserted, were especially guarded in the message. He had not asked for a reduction of revenue on sugar. In order to get fifty million dollars into the Treasury consumers pay fifteen million dollars into the pockets of the favored classes, and manufac- turers.

Mr. Swift, with the candor and truth- fulness for which Republican speakers are noted, did not tell his audience that the Mills bill reduces the tariff upon sugar over eleven million dollars, and on woolen manufactures over twelve million dollars, while putting wool on the free list only reduces it by a little over five dollars. Neither did he say that while eighty-five per cent. of the tariff tax col- lected on sugar goes directly into the treasury, only about twenty per cent. of the tariff taxes on other manufactured articles get into the treasury, while about eighty per cent. or some three hundred million dollars a year, goes into the pockets of the favored classes, instead of fif- teen per cent., or an average of only about ten million a year, on sugar.

Mr. Swift then struck the favor- able note—wool. He said Irish claimed it was put on the free list to make wool come up, and at the same time to make clothes come down. He could not understand that. If Irish could explain that he would be a good one. The simple explanation offered by the ways and means committee, and that naturally would suggest itself to any inquiring mind, he did not deign to notice or answer.

He was sure that by getting clothes cheaper tailors would be thrown out of employment. He dwelt at some length on what a detestable such a policy would be to American tailors.

Nothing, said the speaker, can be made to lie like figures. He did not want to have anything to do with custom house and clearing house reports, and statistics presented by Congressional committees. He had nothing to do with figures, but depended upon plain propositions from which the inference could be drawn that the American people have been im- mensely benefited by protection.

A man, said Mr. Swift, has no right to turn his back on his neighbor and go to England to buy goods. If we had free trade, all the manufacturers there would be in this country would be a few men to nail on horse-shoes and sharpen plow shares.

The high tariff compels the rich man to pay $75 for a $40 suit of clothes, and this is a penalty on the rich for going abroad to buy clothes when he ought to buy at home.

Again the speaker forgot to mention that while the rich man pays on his broadcloth a tariff tax of 50 per cent., the poor man on his cheaper and coarser grades of woolen goods pays from 80 to 150 per cent., the heaviest tax being laid on the cheaper goods.

The New York importers and Southern cotton planters want cheap wages. The Democratic party, and Mr. Mills and Mr. McMillan and Mr. Scott and the Presi- dent all want to see wages reduced in this country. Negroes in the South now work for $5 per month, and these men want the labor of the whole country to come down to that, and even below. No reason was given by Mr. Swift why these men should desire such a condition of affairs.

He ridiculed the idea of our being able to compete with England in manufacturing anything for export. All we could do would be to sell a few mouse-traps in Madagascar. We could not compete with England, and there was no use in trying, without coming down to European wages.

Right here would have been a good opportunity to have explained why with all the rest of the "protection" American labor had not been protected at all against the free inflow of the same European labor, but it was not done.

Mr. Swift closed his remarks with a "very funny" picture of how Cleveland and Irish would perform when they met together after having fooled the people of Oregon and reduced the wages of all the laborers in the land.

In the course of his remarks it was noted that he predicted Cleveland's re- election.

During the speech about one-third of the audience left the room. One work- ing-man was heard to say as he came out on the street: "Well, I've always voted the Republican ticket, and thought the Democrats were lying to me, but if that is all they have to tell us, I'll be d—d if I vote it any longer." This man evi- dently expressed the views of numbers.

The speech was a flat failure. It was on its face so contradictory, so illogical, so bungling an attempt to justify uncon- stitutional and class legislation in the interest of capital, that no one could be deceived by it.

The trouble with the Republican orators is that they have been talking bosh and buncombe for the last twenty years—about nothing but the war, and putting down the rebellion, and saving the Union, and the great guns, and the floating flags, and the grand old party—and now when it comes down to a matter of business, an issue in which they have to give reasons and show cause for their plunder of the people, they are all at sea, and know not how to meet the issue.

THE JOINT DISCUSSION.

A Proposition from Mattoon, Which is Partly Accepted.

Mr. James H. Raley received to-day the following telegram, in response to his challenge to Mr. Mattoon:

"Meet me publicly at La Grande at 8 p. m. on May 25th, Union May 26th; Milton 10 a. m., Weston 3 p. m., Pendle- ton 8 p. m., on May 28th.

"A. R. MATTOON."

As Mr. Raley has been through Union county twice, and as Mattoon well knew has just returned from there to look after the canvass in this county during the next week, he answered as follows:

"Owing to engagements here, impos- sible to meet your appointments at La Grande and Union. Will accept your invitation for Milton, Weston and Pendle- ton on 28th.

Tailor Sociable.

The members of the Methodist Church held a sociable last evening at the resi- dence of Marshal French, near the mill, at which a large crowd participated and a jolly time was had. It was called a "Tailor Sociable," and was conducted as follows: Each young lady provided material and cut out an apron; samples of each apron were then put in a hat and the young men drew them out. The lady whose apron corresponded with the sample drawn had to show the young man how to hem the same. Two prizes were given, one for the neatest and one for the fastest work. H. A. Faxon was awarded the first prize and Cola Fraker the second. Refreshments were served at a very good.

The Milton Murderer Dead.

Sheriff Bentley has received the follow- ing letter from the Warden of the Mani- toba penitentiary:

"In acknowledgement of your favor of Feb. 24th, inquiring about an Indian named Jackson, I beg to say that an In- dian was sent here from Fort McLeod in July, 1887. His name, date of sentence, etc., agrees with the description given in your letter, and no doubt he was the man wanted; but he is now beyond the reach of any earthly justice, as he died in the hospital of this institution on October 9th, 1887."

MULTNOMAH DEMOCRATS.

From the Portland Sunday Welcome. From the information of the EAST OREGONIAN and other journals with similar opinions of Portland Democracy, we shall state there is no such dissension in its ranks as is imputed to it by newspa- pers outside of Multnomah county.

The Democrats of Portland are fully able to take care of themselves, are willing to pay their own campaign expenses and do their very utmost in battling for the principle by which they have ever steadfastly stood. That there are half a dozen cranks in our midst, who would be pleased at a factional fight, is very evident, but these few have neither influence nor ability, and, working in the interests of the Re- publican party, can accomplish no real injury to the cause they have deserted.

The EAST OREGONIAN must remember that the Democrats of Multnomah county are differently situated from those of Umatilla. There you have a sure majority of 150 or 200, while here the Republicans have an easy one of 600 in quiet times, which when the necessity is urgent, and the sack consequently plenteous—its present condi- tion—may be increased to 1,200 or 1,500.

To keep this fraudulent vote reduced the Democracy is determined and, judging by the sentiment universally expressed, it will succeed so far, that a number of the local offices will be filled by Democrats. One-half the Legislative ticket will be elected and so large a vote given for Hon. John M. Gearin, our gallant standard-bearer, that he will be Oregon's next representative to Congress.

Should the fault-finding counties enter the campaign and work as heartily and untiringly as the Democrats of Portland are doing, we venture to predict a Legislature next Jan- uary that will crown our victory by send- ing an Oregon Democrat to the U. S. Sen- ate.

It is positively asserted by Blaine lead- ers that under no circumstances will De- wey permit his name to go before the convention, and he will be in Chicago, himself a delegate, to force his wishes. They assert that Blaine will accept the nomination if tendered to him, although they produce no letter to back up the asser- tion. They claim that the strength of De- wey, Harrison, Phelps, Allison, Stan- ford, and almost all that of Sherman and Rusk, borrowed from Blaine, will come back in proper time, and whenever called upon.
