THE BALL TOURNAMENT.

Full Report of the Games and the Prize-The Last the Greatest Game of

The Stars have doubly repaid the confidence placed in them and have come home from Baker City with a record of victory that will live in the remembrance of the people of Pendleton as long as it is a town. Not once, but four times, did they meet an opponent, and each time did their star remain in the ascendant. The last game, which was to decide the hopes, the capture of the pendleton and huns and the pervex of every specialism and huns and the pervex of every specialism. of this victory has surrounded their name with a halo of glory. It was the last touch needed to complete the picture of the Stars on the canvas of fame; without it the three previous victories would be it the three previous victories would be but empty farces, and the picture would remain an indistinct daub; with it the forms, the features, the actions, of every star will be imprinted on the canvas, and of the present. It made no difference nothing can ever efface the likeness. nothing can ever efface the likeness. But it is becoming to explain how they Pendleton first crossed bats with North Pendleton first and proved utterly futile. Edwards was a baseball player, and every doubt as to well held in this game by Clark and the battery's effectiveness was ended. Chilton.

The Stars then went to the bat, and, The Stars on the following day arrayed themselves against the Grand Ronders. who, withal continually playing in bad siderable ease, finding the ball for several luck throughout the tournament, were safe hits. Notwithstanding Chilton and no mean antagonists. He could not yitch silence vociferously. Baker again went his game, however, owing to the inability of Chilton to catch his most effective beautiful ny to the left field, amid great curves. Chilton's hands were in bad cheering from Eaker; but Culp, making condition, and he was in very tad form a spiendid ron, got order it, and it never to stand behind the bat. After the struck the ground. It was an almost Grand Ronders had made eight to six miraculous catch, and was greeted for Pendleton, in three innings, things began to look dubleas, and it became dicton. Faker was then retired safe hit, out of the reach of any fielder, evident that a change was necessary. So without making a run, and Fendleton and Culp secred, making the winning home. Stillman proved an old standby. Second inning four to one in their favor. Edwards caught him splendidly, and the La Grande boys might as well have tried to stop a locometive as to stand up against this battery and its field support. They scored only two more in the game, ladies in the grand stand were presented. while the stars relied up ten more to to Pevine, Blair and Cannon, of the their credit. The game proved that the boys from Pendleton were fully equal to thus lastic admirers among the fair sex. Any emergency, and if they did not see. Notwithstanding this encouragement of ceed at first, they had pienty of remedies to fall back on. Now came the in another tally, little Ankeny getting most eventful day of all, and at its close the son set upon an eventful stood five to two in favor of the Stars, and seene of splendid victory and wild rejoicing for the one side, and defeat and tery work in the fourth inning on both gloomy discouragement for the other, sides, the Bakers were retired, and the withal after a well-fought battle. The Stars also followed with a goose-egg. In and were putting forth every effort to a little. The Bakers went to the beat the Stars and capture the first prize bat, and three men were fanned and pennant. The clubs were very out one after another by Edwards, be and pennant. The cities were very out one after another by Edwards, be evenly matched, and the contest promised to be an exciting one, and well did never showing in better form. Now it it fulfil that promise. It was now Sunday. On the forenoon of the day, Pen-dleton, in lieu of the programme game they rattled their opponents greatly, to excel one another, and not through with Boise City, some members of which. Culp went to the bat, and found the ball, any bitter spirit. The citizens of Baker and made a fine eatch. By a strange coincidence Devine s nt out another beautiful sky-scraper, which was again caught by Culp in the same manner as in the second inning. Culp ran like a deer and got under it just in time, making a catch which was simply remarkable. Basche sent a grounder to Stillman, who making another goose-egg for Ba-ker. The Stars were also white-washed in this ioning, although making some very good hits. Frazier was retired on an error in over-running first base, after patting a splendid grounder. Things now looked blue for Baker. The

made a fine stop and retired him on first, score was eleven to two in favor of Pendleton, when the baker boys came to the bat in the eighth inning. But Edwards had been gradually giving out, and a dusty wind sprang up and injured his delivery. Man after man got first on balls off his delivery, and those who did not, made safe hits to every part of the diamond and scored one after the other. Fendleton's fielders were rattled at the two and three-base hits which were fly-ing around in their neighborhood, always just out of reach. Edwards finally gave up, and Stillman went into the box, after the bakers had made six He again proved to be an "old reliable." They made two more in the inning off his delivery, but considering the stress of the occasion, he did splen-didly. They were finally retired, one on first, one by Chilton's fly catch, and one by a "fan-out," amid an intense wave of excitement. Pendleton men were blue all over. The Stars went to the but but were rattled, and were retired t a run, the score eleven to ten in without only favor at the end of the inning. yells were tremendous when their boys went in, but notwithstanding the great pressure of excitement, Stillman held them down to one run, which was made on two costly fumbles of grounders by Chilton. Stillman and Cran never lost their heads, and played with great cool-ness and calculation. Frazier in this inning made a neat fly catch, which proved of immense value. The score was now even, and Pendleton had yet another inning, which was to decide the day. was opened by Culp, who won everlast-ing renown by making a safe bit and stealing beautifully to second and third. Stillman came next to the bat, and on this occasion, as always, he proved to be a player on whom reliance could be placed went wild with the frenzy of enjoyment. The Stars were nearly torn to pieces by frantic admirers. Staid and respectatile citizens of Pendleton rushed in and bore Cuip away on their shoulders, while Stillman, Ankeny, Edwards, Cran, and the rest were treated like the beroes they were. It was a chaos of struggling forms, a confusion of excited humanity, a pandemonium of sights, scenes and sounds. But they all finally quieted down, after losing strength and voice in the mad de-were made for their return home. They were met here by a brass band, and given the freedom of the city, which they deserved.

There was no trouble or difficulty whatever in Baker City, the boys there taking their defeat quietly, aithough it was a severe blow. The Stars were magnanimous in their victory, and showed nothing but admiration for the pluckiness of their opponents. There was naturally an intense rivalry between the two nines,
