

A SHORT VISIT TO JOPPA.

Interesting Sketch of What a Traveler Saw in That Scriptural Town.

Landing at Joppa, Dr. Goedicke begins his observations at once. Joppa is one of the oldest cities in the world, and the first possible landing place as one sails northward from Egypt.

A babel of voices, unintelligible to west-ern ears, fills the air, but by degrees the motley crowd of black passengers, of the most varied nationalities, veiled women, shawl-covered Arabs, black Nubians with their red faces, brown Levantines, turbaned Syrians or Egyptians with their flowing robes of all shades, all drift by degrees to the boats, and for a time, at least, you see the best of their red or yellow shippers, and hear their noisy jargon no more.

Not a very dignified entrance, perhaps, but the boats could not approach closer, and you have forced no worse than the best of the Greeks or the best of the Romans did thousands of years ago.

Pursuing our way through the street, we find it rough enough. Once paved, the stones have long since risen or sunk above or below their proper level.

Further on we see a bare armed and bare legged individual in ragged skull cap, cotton jacket, and cotton knickerbockers, chattering with a roadside junkster for some delusion.

Then again we see an Arab in "kellysh" or head shawl, with a band of camel's hair rope, very soft, around his head to keep the flowing gear in its place, and a brown and white striped "abba" for his outer dress.

An English Marriage Law.

The English are noted for the obstinacy with which they cling to old laws and customs, and for the caution with which, often, they hesitate to alter laws and customs which have become wholly unsuited to the age.

The Votes of Wage Earners. W. T. Crossgate in N. Y. Standard. The large remainder of wage earners are still subject to the same influences that existed before the campaign of 1884.

Another and very considerable section will swing its way or that in accord with what they feel to be the interests of "labor" in this contest. For years all of these men have heard it asserted that a high tariff is designed to maintain higher wages than would otherwise be paid in the United States.
