Furthermore, the cash tax will remain in effect, in the event the county court so elects.

The success of the new road system has been more and more recognized by Judge Lowell's Address. "In the name of this fair city whose reedom I extend and in behalf of all its people, I give you greeting.

"We welcome you as representative of the noblest profession, save one which graces the earth today. Chris tendom must lay its offerings first at the foot of God's white altar, and recognize as highest among the occupa-tions of men the ambassadorship of that divine Teacher who said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature;" but next must rank that calling which has in charge the moulding and development of the plastic mind of youth.

"It was said in poetic phrase at an earlier time, that the hand which rocks the cradle rules the world,—a fit reces the cradle rules the world,—a littribute and recognition of a mother's influence. But side by side with that sentiment might justly stand another,—the measure of a nation's character is the standard of its teachers.

"The ultimate measure of a life's value is the good accomplished, and what is true of a single life is applicable alike to the aggregate of lives which makes up what we denominate a profession. It is a mighty influence a teacher wields—greater than that of preacher, because exerted under condi-tions of authority, and upon minds re-sceptive, alert, unbiased; greater than that of the platform, because exerted daily and amid surroundings which permit example and command atten-tion; greater than the press, because the newspaper reflects public senti-ment upon intellectual and moral questions; rarely leads it.

"Therefore, while your profession must yield to the pulpit in rank and reverence, by devotion and courageous effort, it may be its rival as an uplifting force in a reactionary world. Will you make it so? you make it so? higher living, not for money or fame crown you with the laurel wreath but that the world may move forward tonight, not as empty compliment or pleasing sentiment,—you who are in the work for love and devotion,—but as an honor carned by the achievements for the blind, the deaf, the mute and the sentiment of the senti of labor and sacrifice. The Goddess of the schoolroom is a jealous mistress. She requires of her devotees undivided fulness. She requires of her devotees unary decorate attention, and unreasoning worship at her shrine. Those who enter the profession as a stepping stone to something else never reach its lofty stated. May we not ask here consideration of the higher subject, what to tions. Those who engage in teaching for the money it may bring never get their heads above the level of the crowd. The honors of your calling are not the buzzas of applauding multitudes, nor are its rewards bank stocks and gilded palaces. Its honors and rewards must be found, if found at all, in the clearer visions, enlightened in the clearer visions, enlightened minds and nohler purposes of our reached approximate perfection—but communities and the higher civilization of the street of the stree communities and the higher civilization of the age.

"Let me, then, welcome you for what your profession has already accomplished, and for the great characters it has produced.

"From the middle of the seventeenth century, when, upon the soil of Massachusetts, the common school system was born, until 1837, when the influence of that educational genius, Horace Mann, extended the system throughout the northern portion of the republic, development in education was largely incidental, a sort of natural concomitant of that peculiar civilization. concomitant of that peculiar civiliza-tion which first became manifest to the world in the historic compact of the Mayflower cabin.

"Since that time, its marvellous extension and improvement, alike in cure a co-operation of the educational common school and college, has been forces of the several states along educatension and improvement, alike in common school and college, has been through the effort and originality of professional educators. It is due to teachers themselves that, out of the dry and unattractive book methods of the fathers, has come a system which makes modern education so well rounded, so comprehensive in its purposes, that it is applicable alike to every faculty and power of youth. The machine iteration, the A. B. C. of the primary grade of the past, has given place to child study, the kindergarten and the Quincy method, while in the intermediate, grammar and high schools the text-book is supplemented by attractive means of educating not only the memory, but the eye, the ear, and the hand, in artistic, scientific, musical and manual training. And, to those who are ambitious to pursue the Muse of learning further, she will kindly lead to halls where no longer Greek and Latin reign supreme, but where the elective system presents opportunities for attainment of lofty p'ace in art, science, literature or such scene of action as may be most attractive.

"The doors of the higher institu-tions, once closed to woman, who was formerly deemed incapable of mastering their courses, now open wide to her; and, instead of occupying sub-ordinate place, she is leading her her; and, instead of occupying subordinate place, she is leading her classes and wearing the laurels of commencement day. To paraphrase the eloquant sentence of Wendell Phillips of a kindred subject,—the grand diapason of human thought was never struck until the progressive spirit of modern educators opened to women opportunities for complete devalopment.
"At your feet, as members of this Court Street profession, I lay a tribute of profession and I lay a lay respect, for the glamor of great names is over this audience tonight. In the teachers' association was especially enjoyable. The formal portions of the program were had at the court house. The Rev. C. A. Dotson gave an invocation, and Judge S. A. Lowell delivered the welcoming address, which was an able and pertinent discussion of the profession of pedagogy. Miss Shepherd, of Lewiston, responded, as did also Prof. Waller, of Pullman, and Salem, each one speaking appropriately to various themes.
