The republican leaders in Washington declare the objects of the tariff upon Puerto Rico products imported into this country is to establish a right to impose such a tariff in later years...

Louisiana went democratic Tuesday, by a larger majority than usual. It was to be expected, Louisiana is in the habit of voting one way. Now, if Pennsylvania should go democratic it would be a cause for surprise...

Somebody has discovered that Seneca, the Roman philosopher, had a fortune estimated at $17,500,000 and that in his day and generation no reference was made to the octopus, as is the case at this time in connection with rich men who control great wealth...

Admiral Dewey was a member of the first Philippine commission, and it is said he blames President McKinley for falling to receive $10,000 for his services, which amount each of the other members of the commission received, with the exception of General Otis...

Salem Statesman: We would remind our friend, the Oregonian, that Senator McBride has the well earned reputation of being a very live corpse. He was reported almost at death's door a good many times, while he was secretary of state, but he got up from his bed of sickness a United States senator...

ment among the people, that governments are largely conducted in the interest of the few at the expense of the many, and every man, high or low, is out for the stuff, and Dewey belongs to the tribe of Take-all-you-can-get, and is of the same calibre as Otis.

The other day three convicted murderers were put to death in Puerto Rico by the garrote, the Spanish method of capital punishment. President McKinley was appealed to but refused to interfere, preferring to allow the law of the island to take its course. The president is being criticised for permitting the use of the garrote in this instance, his critics contending that the garroters should have been used. The critics appear silly under the facts.

The announcement of new cures for supposedly incurable diseases is a matter of almost daily occurrence. The new cures as a rule are a series of wondrous, and then they sink into oblivion and are forgotten. Nevertheless, the oft-repeated disappointment which their failure causes does not serve to rob them of their public interest. Victims of the disease which they are supposed to remove, as well as the general public, read every new announcement with avidity and are disposed to place the greatest reliance in it until the unreliability and worthlessness of the new remedy has been fully demonstrated. Now is a case for this general credulity far to seek. Its manifestation is but a demonstration of the truth of the old verity that "hope springs eternal in the human breast."

Another of these alleged specifics has just been found, and its announcement is not unlike that accorded its predecessors. A new cure for cancer is an exhibition of an unquenchable desire for existence under the happiest and most enjoyable conditions.

The method of treatment to which resort has been had in this instance is known as phototherapy. The theory advanced in this case is that cancer cells are unable to live under a strong light of the proper color. To obtain this light an arc lamp of 22 candle power is used. The light is deflected into a 3-foot telescope arrangement to intensify and concentrate it. In order to prevent burning of the flesh or the scorching of the skin the light has to be directed at its best rays. This is done by substituting quartz lenses in the telescope for glass lenses. To facilitate this part of the work the light rays are caused to pass through clear, cold water. The instrument thus arranged is attached to that part of the patient's body affected by the disease, and the rays of light are poured on it for the space of an hour. One of the instruments described has been installed in St. John's hospital, Brooklyn, and, so it is claimed, with gratifying results.—Chicago Times-Herald.

POLITICAL COMMENT. Sacramento Bee: Portland journalism, like Providence, moves in a mysterious way its wonders to perform. The Portland Oregonian abuses McKinley and then turns around and says he ought to be re-elected for the benefit and safety of the country, while the Portland Telegram, which is the evening edition of the Oregonian, and owned by the same man, thinks that McKinley ought not to be re-elected and yet says that it would be a disgrace to the Nation to elect William J. Bryan.

Salem Statesman: We would remind our friend, the Oregonian, that Senator McBride has the well earned reputation of being a very live corpse. He was reported almost at death's door a good many times, while he was secretary of state, but he got up from his bed of sickness a United States senator. The people of Oregon should be interested in at least one thing, in regard to the case of Senator McBride, or in reference to any other man that he is treated fairly, and not misrepresented. Senator McBride has done exceedingly well in the upper house of congress. He has secured membership on some of the most important and influential committees in that body, where he is in position to do effective work for his state. He has done and is doing such work. The American people want to see fair play. The spirit that calls for this is instinctive with them and with all other people.

Chicago Times-Herald: The discussion of Governor Roosevelt's availability for the second place on the national republican ticket has gone far enough to reveal the fact that the American people do not want this brilliant young leader buried in the vice presidential office. It is something more than a question of mere party expediency. The people believe that Governor Roosevelt is the coming man in this country. He fills out in such adequate measure the popular conception of what an American statesman ought to be that the plan of the bosses to sacrifice him for the national ticket is certain to meet with determined resistance.

Louisville Courier-Journal: The ticket that will be nominated by the democrats at Kansas City will be headed by William J. Bryan. The Courier-Journal has said this twice in the last twelve months, and each time somebody has affected to be surprised. There was but one man who, under favoring conditions, might have tried conclusions with Mr. Bryan's grip upon the nomination, and that one was Admiral Dewey. In the autumn of 1895, Admiral Dewey had given his consent, a movement would have been started to name Dewey and Wheeler, which would have proved strong enough to carry all before it, and which might have defied any divisions that faction could bring against it. The people were ripe for a new shuffle and cut. They were full of the American spirit. But the admiral would not. He let the time go by. The occasion passed, and, with the end of it, came the end of all opposition that could be made even respectable to the claim of Mr. Bryan.

A STORY OF M'KINLEY. The man who bears ill-will cannot be a great man. If reports are true President McKinley has characteristics of greatness. Mr. McKinley is said to be the most forgiving of men; that he never bears ill-will toward any one about anything. His intimates say he is the most remarkable man in that respect they ever saw. The president praised Dewey to the skies when he knew the admiral was angry at him and was giving vent to his anger in a regular quarter-deck, sea dog way. Not long ago Mr. Hamlin, former assistant secretary of the treasury, called at the White House to invite the president to go to Boston. "And who else is invited to the affair?" asked the president. Mr. Hamlin named Senator Lodge.

Governor Wolcott and others, and then passed. He was just a little nervous. "You have not mentioned Senator Hoar," said the president. "No; I-I—" "Senator Hoar must be invited, by all means," said the president. "Mr. Hoar and I have our differences of opinion, but he is a grand old man and I love him very much."
