Governor Geer is opposed to militarism, and therefore he declares that we should take no risks of involving ourselves in a quarrel with England by expressing our sympathy for the Boers. Governor Geer appears to be one republican who follows the advice of Washington, to avoid entangling alliances, which the McKinley administration has not done.

There is a firm of printers in Portland that is hand and glove in with the Simon gang of political bandits. This printing firm secures the patronage of the counties under republican control. In Portland it secures much public printing without submitting bids and is fed at the public trough by order of Joe Simon, United States senator and political boss. Recently the Portland printers submitted their bids for printing of the ballots to be used in the election next month in that county. When these bids were received the obliging republican county clerk notified the favored firm, and one of its members put in a bid at the same price as the lowest bid submitted by the others, and at once the clerk awarded the job to him. The other printers were justly indignant when they discovered the trick played upon them, but the Portland Oregonian, true to its allegiance to Simon-Corbett et al, took pains to approve editorially the clerk's action and to throw the onus of a piece of dirty work upon the duped printers, even charging them with effecting a combination to get the work at a fancy price. The Oregonian frequently shows all the ear marks of an organ and none of those of a fair newspaper.

A few weeks ago W. J. Bryan, a man of character, prominence and good standing, visited Oregon and delivered a number of public addresses. The Portland Oregonian belittled his meetings, and the attendance, and ridiculed the speaker in its brief reports in its news columns. During his tour, only once did it make a full report of his speechmaking and that when he spoke in Portland. At the present time M. W. Howard, ex-congressman and middle-of-the-roader, is speechmaking in Oregon and everywhere he appears the Portland paper prints an extended report of his remarks and gives him credit for ability and influence. Why? Simply because Ex-Congressman Howard was sent to tour Oregon in the interest of the republican cause and the Oregonian has been so notified by those who are parties to the deal. But the treatment accorded Bryan and that accorded Howard proves one thing: That the Oregonian is not to be depended on when it comes to printing political news of any sort. In short, the Oregonian is an unfair, dishonest newspaper, ready at all times to further the republican cause by giving publicity to any misrepresentation and deception, so long as it is in its favor, while neglecting and refusing to print the news of the opposition party. A newspaper prints the news, prints it fully and fairly, with greater fullness and fairer fairness toward adversaries than toward supporters. A newspaper should have its principles in one party, but should certainly have its readers in both. The time will come when the Oregonian will have only readers in one party, because of its flagrant violations of the laws that should govern the conduct of a great newspaper.

There are still signs that money is to be spent in this county to debauch voters. There is talk of buying a pack of human sheep on the reservation. There is a man in Pendleton, who was sent for by some one, to come here to do this dirty work. He has done such work in Pendleton before. "He knows how to do it," say those who desire his services. If those who are concerned in this rascality attempt too much in this line it is probable that they can be found out, and, if so, they can be convicted and severely punished under the law. The East Oregonian will make any sacrifice to expose and convict those engaged in the nefarious work. It will shield nobody if it once can get hold of evidence that is substantial and convincing. The East Oregonian requests the two county chairmen, and the candidates of both parties as well, to furnish it with the names of those who approach them for money with which to influence voters. The East Oregonian will publish all such names, and such other information as is given it, without revealing the names of the informants until it may be necessary to take the matter into the courts, with the view of carrying both the briber and the bribed to serve a term in the penitentiary, where all such belong.

HOPE FOR THE BARBARIAN.

History records more than one notable instance in which a decadent and corrupt civilization has been purged and purified by a barbarian invasion; but none more notable than that wave of Teutonic barbarism which, after the downfall of Rome, swept over Europe, revitalizing energies which had become deadened by Roman influence and example. Not only did the Goths and Vandals shatter the mighty empire of the Caesars, but they infused new blood into peoples long under subjection to the Romans and gave a fresh and virile impulse to civilization which lasted for centuries. Some writers, perhaps, taking history's self-repetition too literally, look for the barbaric purge whenever they fancy they see undoubted signs of decadency, and the more pessimistic of these, believing such a time is near, are casting about in vain to see from what quarter the modern Goth will come. In the sense in which the term barbarian is commonly understood, they cannot find him, and so are at a loss to determine what influence shall come to offset what they are pleased to consider the decay of modern civilization. To these well-meaning pessimists the editor of East and West, in the June number of that consistent magazine, comes with a grain of comfort. He has found the barbarian and he did not go outside the boundaries of the United States to make the discovery.

With the world today dominated by the Anlgo-Saxon, Teuton, Latin and Slav, the barbarian of history can not be found, at least not in sufficient numbers to expect anything extraordinary from him. But East and West, granting that the barbarian is needed, or soon will be, is not disconcerted. It asks, What is a barbarian? and answers that "he is not necessarily a nomad, dressing in skins and warring with stock and stone. Barbarian, like modern, is simply a term designating a state of mind; one in whom the seeds of the higher civility and self-consciousness have not as yet germinated or even been sown. Barbarians of this kind the world has always had with it, keeping them subject to practical primitiveness, even in the midst of the seed time and harvest of culture and decadence." The East Oregonian does not class itself with those who see a fast-growing decadency in this young and vigorous republic. There is far too much here that is vital, virile, undeveloped and aggressive to permit decadency to get more than the merest foothold. Where there is growth there can be no decay and the most pronounced characteristic of the American people today is growth. It does not agree with East and West that even the world, much less America, now needs the tempestuous onslaught of the barbarian; but it is willing to admit that when such need arises America will not hesitate to cry for its barbarian and that it will find in him "a man who, though as yet untouched and untainted by civilization, in its utmost complexity, will be able to take up the best in it, and carry it on to a higher degree of perfection." It also concedes that "for this purpose the home barbarian the true life-guard of the kingdom of the spirit, is as useful as the foreign invader."

* * *

Rome had this home barbarian as well as the one who clamored at her walls; but she did not know how to utilize the one within, and so fell a prey to the more aggressive one without. Rome must have realized that, in spite of her, the world would still progress; she had missed her chance of permanency by suppressing the barbarian within her walls, by failing to develop him and thus keep the national blood always red and full of vitality. In a sense this is both a warning and an example for other nations, a warning America is heeding and an example she is avoiding, for "something instinctive tells us today that we must develop our own internal resources, and this instinct has taken outward expression in the extension of education down into the roots and hidden places of society. Education is the weapon we have put into the hands of the barbarians who are to make the next conquest of the world and the next renovation of culture and of society." The modern barbarians are preparing in grammar school, high school, in college and 'in university against the time when they shall be the gardeners. "They have already laid a firm foundation of political and economical security, and now they are, from the strongest modern material point of vantage, reaching out and possessing themselves of life's fairer and broader meadow lands."

* * *

Naturally East and West sees some offensive and absurd phases in the first expressions of home barbarism, but it considers these inseparable from the work of "coaling up," and prophesies hopefully of the time, not far distant, "when order and proportion will have been introduced into the present chaos and when the new forces, having established their definite connections with the old currents of spent and sluggish rivers, will have already begun to control their torrent within a narrower river bed." The barbaric renovation of Europe was a storm which passed; but "the beauty about this modern barbarian invasion is that it's not merely for now, but for all time. It will be continually renewed." Essentially is this true of America, with its future all before it, with no embarrassing or limiting traditions and with the basic understanding that here there are equal rights for all and special advantages for none.

* * *

There will be little disposition on he part of the common folk of this country to quarrel with East and West over the term "barbarian," for to this molding, controlling and vitalizing element must it be applied if at all. The 'plain people" do not care much for names; they are busy with principles. Most of the younger generation in America may be pleased to call themselves barbarians, just as the editor of the East and West is so pleased, providing the term is understood to define a movement in which they shall be guiding intelligences—"baptized Alarics and Theodorics." It is today, as in the days of Goldsmith, the common folk, the plain people, the "masses" if you will, who must lead in every vital advancement and who must check, revitalize or crush any decadent tendencies they may notice in the "comparative few" who are disposed to arrogate to themselves all the "higher" forms of culture and civilization. America puts her trust in her common folk, her "home barbarians," and fears not for the future. In this hopeful view, so eloquently and logically put in word by East and West, this young magazine continues to follow the high plane upon which it set out. In this, its eighth number, is added reason for the confidence of those who started the enterprise, that a periodical devoted strictly to letters need not perish in the United States through lack of appreciation and support.

"Good Night."

How few women know what it is to have a good night; a night of sound, restful sleep. They smile and say "good night" in cheery tones, but when the chamber door closes behind them, the smiling mask drops off, and shows the lines of suffering.

Other women have had the bad nights changed to good by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. So may you. Ninety-eight times in every hundred it perfectly cures diseases of the delicate womanly organs. It builds up the nervous system, puts flesh on the body and color on the cheek.

"Favorite Prescription," writes Mrs. C. N. Anderson, of Rockbridge Baths, Rockbridge Co., Va., "is a God-send to weak and sickly women, restoring health without subjecting their nerves to the shock of an examination.

"I was all run down in health—could not work but a short while without resting. Was so nervous at times that I could not even write; had a very poor appetite. I decided to write to Dr. Pierce and state my case. I received a favorable reply, and commenced taking the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets.' Took six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of 'Pellets.' I can now work as well as I could before I was taken sick. I think Dr. Pierce's medicines the best in the world for sick and nervous women."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are specially adapted to the use of delicate women. Easy to take, gentle in action.
