causing more friction.

During the previous prevalency of settlers' rates, all roads were agreed and avoided the friction now engendered by each road ignoring the other. The Northern Pacific and the Canadian Pacific became incensed becames the Great Northern reduced the rates without notifying or giving the other roads a chance to participate. Therefore the Northern Pacific returned the blow and extended the time of the rates nearly a year beyond the Great Northern's time and then all the companies began the fight, so that now people east from the Missouri river can purchase tickets to the west at prices purchase tickets to the west at prices far below those prevailing under the former tariff agreement.
