OUR SECRET ALLIANCE WITH ENGLAND.

It was at least impolitic, if not absolutely unwarranted, for Mr. Chamberlain, secretary of state for the colonies of the English Empire, to say, when speaking at Stouthigh Bridge:

"Great Britain's foreign policy, as I sum it up, is to remain on friendly terms which every great country in Europe, and SOMETHING MORE THAN FRIENDLY TERMS WITH THE UNITED STATES."

In view of the mooted question as to the existence of a secret alliance between the United States and Great Britain, Secretary Chamberlain's significant statement is suggestive that such an alliance actually exists. Otherwise, his assertion would be untrue.

Every good citizen will rejoice at the prevalence of friendly feeling towards the United States in European countries. It is even admissable that a closer relation should exist between the United States and England than between the United States and any other country. But, upon no hypothesis and from no cause legitimate, is Secretary Chamberlain authorized to proclaim to the world that "something more than friendly terms" is the definition of the existing relations.

Had he said that with the United States more friendly relations existed than with any other nation, his assertion would have been merely the truth most natural and right. But to say what he did say at Stouthigh Bridge gives indisputable proof that the allegations are true pertaining to the reported secret alliance.

Washington officials would better deny Chamberlain's statements, or else plead guilty to having committed an act of imperialistic character, and then stultified themselves by denying the truth.

MANIPULATING THE INDUSTRIES.

A press dispatch says that the flour mills of Minneapolis are closing, for the reason that "the foreign trade is practically dead." The dispatch closes, however, with the usual buncombe that "none of the mills will resume until after election. Inference, McKinley's election will stimulate the foreign flour trade.

Another press dispatch says something about the foreign flour trade of the Pacific being hampered by the Chinese troubles, and then ends with the assertion that the trade with the Orient is larger than ever.

Another dispatch tells that the Illinois Steel company has closed the mills in South Chicago, Joliet and other places, because of the uncertainty of the coming election.

Thus the corporate interests and the newspapers give tangible evidence that the allegation of Democratic National Committeeman Campau, of Michigan, was true, when the other day he predicted just what has now come to pass.

POWER OF ONE GREAT TRUST.

If anyone has been inveigled into the belief that, as Mark Hanna says, in effect, "no trusts are menacing these United States," let him read the subjoined taken from American Investments, a non-partisan financial journal published at Buffalo, N. Y.:

The controlling shareholders must hold together, which means that the company will continue to grow bigger and more powerful until, in our opinion, its shares will reach the thousand mark within five years. The company already fondles the financial key in the city of New York, and mighty few things can 'go through,' if they are of great proportions, without the Standard "wink."

In pertinent comment on the foregoing, the Spokesman-Review of Spokane remarks:

In other words, this single trust, in addition to forcing tribute from every home in America, controls the financial keys of New York, and through that banking center the financial keys of the whole country. And year by year it grows more opulent and all-powerful.

The republican party may win in the approaching election, but even as it wins it will be reeling to disaster. A party so steeped in greed and selfishness—so quick to bend the ear to the lightest whisper coming from these swollen trusts—will surely be called to account by the American people.

This fact stares the American people in the face—The Standard Oil trust today has stock outstanding amounting to $97,500,000; 35 per cent of dividends have been declared already this year, as against 23 during 1899. In less than two years, this trust has paid 71 per cent in dividends, or a clear profit of $69,250,000, or $1 per capita for all the people in the United States.

Viewed in the immensity of its power and the magnitude of its operations, the Standard Oil company alone could well afford to contribute several million dollars to the campaign fund of the republican party.

TAX-PAYING BY CORPORATIONS.

An instance of rank injustice is afforded by the publication of the fact that 23 quasi-public corporations in Chicago, having $288,105,312 of property, are assessed only $32,278,745 by Cook county. So shameful has the assessment become, that the Chicago Teachers' Federation has instituted proceedings to compel a juster taxing of these wealthy corporations.

Apropos, it is stated to the East Oregonian that in a county in the Inland Empire an interest owning a million dollars of property pays $800 taxes annually. Were the usual rate of taxation paid by this concern on all property owned, the amount would be $29,800. The figures and the accompanying facts speak for themselves more eloquently than could any added words.

CARING FOR THE MOLARS.

Of all the ills to which flesh is heir human teeth seem to have appropriated more than their share. From the delighted advent of baby's first pearly tooth to old age, when the plate refuses to fit the shrunken jaws, the teeth stand in the light of a necessary evil. Mother sighs over baby's second summer and the teething season. Six-year-old is discouraged because his teeth are falling out. Active Johnny wails with the toothache, Miss Fanny sorrows over her obstreperous wisdom tooth, grandpa has broken his set and feels foolish and toothless and the children must be both bribed and driven to go to the dentist for an annual examination.

That this state of affairs is unnatural and unnecessary Dr. De Voe explains in a prize essay on "The Care of the Teeth" in the October number of the Cosmopolitan magazine. While care of the teeth may seem an easy task, if the human race would preserve its natural and racial endowments, it must look more closely into the issues of hygiene and right living.

Physical deterioration is the result of the modern struggle for existence. Whatever affects the digestion disturbs the health of the teeth. And this nervous strain surely does. Foods are provided not requiring masticating and very little digestion. In a way the teeth are useless. Hard chewing of scouring food, gritty corn, nuts and fruits; biting and tearing of meat, formerly kept the teeth sharp and well polished. They were a necessity and nature saw that they were equal to the demand put upon them.

From the display of gold crowns, scientific bridge work, elaborate fillings and other artistic specimens of the skilled dentist's work shown by a dozen smiling maidens in a street car the inference might be drawn that it was a new phase of personal adornment. Unfortunately the brave display of gol does not hide the fact that these triumphs of the dentist's art cover physical decay.

* * *

Causes of failing teeth may be deep seated or may result from lack of care. Dr. De Voe counts among the deep-seated causes the highly wrought chemical and culinary arts of the last century, which present food moist, warm and partially digested, ready for swallowing, without the aid of the teeth. Self-indulgence and luxury, as well as undue privation, affect bodily nutrition and the welfare of the teeth and the mouth. Lack of cleanliness is a source of much evil. Decaying food lodged between teeth, accumulations of tartar and deposits of acids from the digestive organs are responsible for poor molars. Diseases of teeth and gums are inherited.

Good teeth, like liberty, are the reward of eternal vigilance, plus good ancestry, is a truth Dr. De Voe would instil. Care of the teeth divides itself into three periods: 1. Care of the parent for the teeth of her unborn child, of her babes and young children. 2. The care an individual gives his own teeth. 3. Professional care, medical or surgical, to repair conditions of dental deformity.

* * *

Considering the question of parental responsibility, how many intelligent people realise their duty? How many in the selection of a life partner, among the attractions, look for good health, good habits and good teeth; for hereditary and constitutional reasons, as the good doctor would have them do? Teeth preserved through the trying periods of infancy, in maturer years are likely to be firm and reliable. Good teeth at 20 is a promise of good teeth at 50 years of age. An infant's milk teeth are dependent on its digestion. The milk teeth shield the reserve cavities containing the germs of the permanent teeth. Infants of good constitution who are not overfed, duly exercised in the open air and supplied with nutritious food need not be victims of agonizing experiences during teething season.

Good suggestions are given for the inexperienced mother. Cleanse baby's mouth daily with absorbent cotton and warm water. When the milk teeth come, keep them rigidly clean. As for food, if baby must be fed, cow's milk and barley water, but no boric acid nor chemical preservative. Organic lime salts, the tooth foods, exist in milk, but are not found in starch, sugar nor potatoes. Organic phosphates and carbonate of lime are supplied by rolled oats, wheat and graham flour.

While these are foods for the teeth they are not always suited to 2-year-old digestion. Vegetarians should not deny the child a little meat if his system needs such nourishment. Lime salts, required in tooth development, are found in meat, fish and eggs. More truth than fiction is the old saying, "Eat bread crusts to make your cheeks red." Give the children food that demands grinding and chewing. Any organ, to be kept in health, must be kept at work.

* * *

Now, about grown folks. With them, too, eternal vigilance is the price of good teeth. Tooth brush, tooth powder and antiseptic wash, frequent use of all three weapons if one would wage a winning battle against decay of the teeth. Good teeth, bright and shining, undoubtedly win admiration because behind them are evidences of good health and personal cleanliness. The stamina and vital condition of the individual have much to do with the origin and progress of diseases of the teeth. So long as the body is in a healthy state microbes cannot attack the teeth. Decay is an evidence of physical weakness.

Caries, the common form of decay, is due to dyspeptic troubles, tartar on the teeth and microbes. Molars are most liable to caries, which is the disease of toothache reputation and the cause of gumboils. Brisk brushing with precipitated chalk and some antiseptic, as formaldehyde or formal, ten drops to half a pint of pure water, warm or cold, is a good antiseptic always convenient. Brush teeth at least twice a day after meals—and always thoroughly at night.

Papers of practical nature like Dr. De Voe's on "The Care of the Teeth" are of widespread benefit. The common things of daily life are overlooked in pursuit of the remote. Simple directions bearing on care of the eyes, ears or teeth cannot be read nor brought to mind too often. The profession of dentistry has made vast strides in scientific lines during late years. The family dentist, like the family doctor, becomes a benefit to humanity when his ministrations are directed toward the preservation of the race.

Grandpa

Everybody's proud of this sort of Grandpa, and he's proud of himself; proud of his clear brain and active body. There are other kinds of grandparents that we can't be proud of. Weak of body and feeble of mind, we can only pity them. They no more live; they only exist. What makes the difference between these two classes of old men? A sound stomach and a plentiful supply of pure, rich blood. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery strengthens the stomach, purifies the blood, and increases the activity of the blood-making glands. It won't make old men young, but it will enable old men to assimilate the food they eat, and so strengthen them for a life of reasonable exertion.

"I suffered for six years with constipation and indigestion, during which time I employed several physicians, but they could not reach my case," writes Mr. G. Puppenwell, of Eureka Springs, Carroll Co., Ark. "I felt that there was no help for me; could not retain food on my stomach; had vertigo and would fall helpless to the floor. Two years ago I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and little 'Pellets,' and improved from the start. After taking twelve bottles of the 'Discovery' I was able to do light work, and have been improving ever since. I am now in good health for one of my age—60 years. I owe it all to Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Old people often need a laxative medicine. The best for them is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.
