Are Laborers Getting Their Share of "Full Dinner Pail" Prosperity?

Carroll D. Wright, United States commissioner of labor, has just got out a bulletin which makes a comparison of the wages in 192 occupations for the past few years. The average rate of 1891 is taken as basis, and is put at the figure 100. On this basis the wages in these employments was down to 99.32 in 1893, and to 97.88 in 1895. The average was up to 101.64 in 1899, and it is at the 103.43 mark in 1900.

EVERY MAN SHOULD VOTE.

No one can deny the legal right of John G. Carlisle to refrain from voting on November 6. According to yesterday's press dispatches, Mr. Carlisle positively said that, notwithstanding he had been announced in the morning papers as intending to vote for Mr. McKinley, he had no such intention. "In fact," said he, "I propose to vote for neither of the two presidential candidates." This course, according to Mr. Carlisle's statement, is dictated by reasons entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. Carlisle most certainly promulgates hereby a weak doctrine. It is surprising, indeed, coming from one who has been credited with the courage of his convictions. He is acting something of the moral coward, and will not be admired so much by democrats as he would be were he to announce an intention of supporting the president. He will not gain the admiration of the republicans so much as he would were he to announce that he will vote for Mr. Bryan.

People do not much admire a shirker. They may hate an opponent, but they may also respect him in a manner, indeed, in a large degree. But, a man of the commanding influence of John G. Carlisle, whose name is a family byword, and who "sinks in his tent" like the Grecian warrior whose name is now a synonym for cowardice, owes it to himself to let it be known to the world, just how he stands. He should be on one side or the other of the fight.

Apropos, Grover Cleveland, the previous day, announced through the dispatches that he "had not decided to vote for Mr. McKinley;" but he failed to go on and say that he would vote for Mr. Bryan.

Someone is right in this campaign. Either Mr. McKinley has followed a wise and wholesome course or he has not. Either Mr. Bryan is a safe leader, or he is not. And all citizens owe it to their duty and self-respect to let the world know where they stand on these mooted questions.

The man who is afraid to own his political convictions is a coward. The man who takes position such as that of Carlisle and Cleveland, strange as it may be to read such assertions concerning the iron-willed and quondam outspoken man of destiny, must have lost nerve and courage.

OUR STOCK INDUSTRY.

Stockmen will have an enormous quantity of beef cattle to turn off next spring. Down in the Butter creek country several thousand head are feeding for the winter, and the hay is plentiful. Even a harsh winter could not discount the owner of cattle there, because he has an abundance of hay and is supplied in every way with the facilities with which to care for stock through the severest weather. Years of losses, often nearly bankruptcy, have taught the Umatilla county stockman to be forehanded and to provide against weather contingencies.

Fully as important is the demand for higher bred cattle. Some enterprising men are introducing thoroughbreds and have herds in which the grade is being raised every successive year. This deserves encouragement. It will put money into the pockets of everyone, and establish the livestock industry upon a firmer basis.

Hand in hand with improvement in beef and dairy cattle go the creamery projects. In two localities in Umatilla county, Camas Prairie and the Milton and Freewater district, creameries are secured. Others will be put in and at other points, to further enrich the county.

And this will be the entering wedge. It will precede the diversification of farming, which will eventually make this county a real garden of plenty.

PATHETIC FATE OF THE GAYUSE.

The neglected Gayuse, erstwhile king of the range in Eastern Oregon, now remains but a dim memory, a suggestion of what once was, a reminder of the time when he had a pasture half a thousand miles long and half as wide as that. He is hated by the horseman, loathed by the cattlemen, antagonized by the sheepman. He hears no prayer for his comfort during the cold winter, but rather petitions that he may be destroyed and his tribe effaced.

The Gayuse is being crowded from the earth. Not only are succulent pastures of nutritious forage grasses denied him whenever possible, but he is ignored by the horse buyer. They come from the East to purchase, and turn a cold shoulder to a horse weighing less than a thousand, and the Gayuse doesn't weigh that much.

Despised by all, he ekes out a miserable career which even now is a prophecy of the nothingness that awaits him. To crown the disgrace, he is sold to a butcher and cut up into meat to feed to soldiers and to France.

And then, worse than all, the state veterinary causes him to be shot by the hundreds, and the crows vandalize him in his alkali grave.

Surely, the end of the Gayuse pony is sad. It is calculated to melt a stony heart into drops of pity.

THIS WONDERFUL CENTURY.

During the last one hundred years the world has seen great wars, great national and social upheavals, great religious movements, great economic changes. Literature and art have had their triumphs and have permanently enriched the intellectual inheritance of our race.

Yet, large as is the space which subjects like these legitimately fill in our thoughts, much as they will occupy the future historian, it is not among these that seek for the most important and the most fundamental differences which separate the present from preceding ages. Rather is this to be found in the cumulative products of scientific research, to which no other period offers a precedent or a parallel.

No single discovery, it may be, can be compared in its results to that of Copernicus; no single discoverer can be compared in genius to Newton; but, in their total effects, the advances made by the nineteenth century are not to be matched.

Not only is the surprising increase of knowledge new, but the use to which it has been put is new also. The growth of industrial invention is not a fact we are permitted to forget. We do, however, sometimes forget how much of it is due to close connection between theoretic knowledge and its utilitarian application which, in its degree, is altogether unexampled in the history of mankind.

I suppose that, at this moment, if we were allowed a vision of the embryonic forces which are predestined most potent to affect the future of mankind, we should have to look for them not in the legislature nor in the press, nor in the platform, nor in the schemes of practical statesmen, nor in the dreams of political theorists, but in the laboratories of scientific students whose names are but little in the
