NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC TICKET

FOR PRESIDENT,

William J. Bryan.

OF NEBRASKA.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

Adlai E. Stevenson.

OF ILLINOIS.

FOR PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS,

W. M. PIERCE, of Umatilla.
DELL STUART, of Multnomah.
J. WHITAKER, of Benton.
E. KRONER, of Multnomah.

SOME INVALUABLE ADVOCACY

The Philadelphia Times, which in 1896 was strongly opposed to W. J. Bryan's candidacy, has come out vigorously for the Nebraskan, this year. In an editorial setting forth the views that moved to such a step, the Times says:

All of the evils and the perils of the socalled republican policy have returned sevenfold, developed and extended till the very foundations of the government seem threatened. A false economic system has resulted in vast combinations of capital that throttle individual industry and hold control over all the functions of government, and the spokesman of the administration, a representative of one of these great trusts, is calling upon his fellow capitalists for contributions to buy a another four years' license to rob, another four years' life for their inflated and false prosperity. The government thus controlled has found its fittest expressions in schemes of military conquest, and the blood and treasure of the nation are poured out to subdue a distant people and rob them of those rights of liberty and independence that America has always claimed for all mankind.

It will be interesting reading out here in Oregon, where the majority of people have only one newspaper of general circulation from which to get political news. The position taken by the Times is that assumed by many persons and papers in the East. For instance, the Springfield, Illinois, Republican comes forward with an editorial expression against the imperialistic and money cringing tendencies of the republican party and argues in a long and strongly written article that the foundations of democracy are crumbling as wealth increases and simplicity vanishes to be replaced with customs imitative of the nobility of Europe.

How any one who observes the course of events in the United States can doubt that this is true, is beyond comprehension. Materialities constitute the sole argument of the republican campaign this year, and that only which makes towards greater wealth is worthy of support as a political doctrine. The issue is this, and this alone:

Republican contention—The rights of wealth and property.

Democratic contention—The rights of man, regardless of his wealth.

The argument is used by republicans that all the business men are for McKinley. It is true to a degree, for the majority of business men are for McKinley. But the majority of the business men were for the Medicis in Florence, and eventually that republic became a despotism. The majority of business men in Rome were for the ruling power which brought in corruption such as finally caused the fall of the proudest nation known in the world's history. What is the weakness of the Chinese empire today? Departure from the simple philosophy of Confucius and the pre-eminence of the system that built up immense fortunes for a few. History teems with examples. The argument that the business men are for McKinley is not final. It is pertinent to inquire why are they for McKinley? Of course, the reasons vary in different cases. But the controlling factors in the manufacturing and financial circles of the East are for him because his policies give them advantage over the mass of men, and permit the aggregation of immense wealth in a few hands, while not materially bettering the condition of the laborer.

It is the relative possession of wealth that makes the difference. Inequalities sometimes constitute injustices. And a system that enables such enormous wealth as that of the Carnegies, the Rockefellers and such men, creating a money nobility, as it may be called, is incompatible with pure democracy or republicanism.

Democracy makes no war on honestly acquired wealth. And it defines "honestly acquired wealth" as wealth secured through legitimate industrial means with the laborer securing his full and equitable share of the product of the industry. Inasmuch as real wealth is but the accumulation of the results of labor, so is dishonestly acquired wealth not real wealth, so is it not entitled to protection from the government.

The Times and the Republican are eminently correct in their courses of reasoning. They properly analyze the conditions existent. And like the Republican of Springfield are thousands of republican papers and men in the United States who naturally incline towards the republican party, but who now intimate that they cannot support Mr. McKinley. Such advocacy as that greatly strengthens the democracy. As does also the following from the New York Evening Post, a conservative paper which has always been regarded as the exponent of Grover Cleveland:

And what a lamentable thing it is for the republicans to be compelled to be evasive or dumb when this rough Orson of politics charges them with trampling upon the rights of man! Mr. Bryan's words bite because they are in substance true. The republican party—the party of freedom, of enfranchisement, of equal rights for white or black—this is the party that has to stand by, silent and shame faced, while this rude democrat from the West indictes it of high crimes and misdemeanors against liberty! You may sneer at the sincerity of the rabble prating about liberty and independence. But if our elite, our educated men, our party of intelligence, abdicate, are we not bound to rejoice that even demagogues and the ignorant masses take up the cause of human freedom and the rights of the oppressed?

TRAVELING MEN AND TRUSTS.

Theodore Marburg, the malapropos of the republican party, made another bad break today, and one that has thrown the leaders into a stew.

Mr. Marburg's firm is one of the biggest firms in the tobacco trust, and Mr. Marburg is an official of that organization. He is also a theoretical politician and has just finished a series of articles in the American on expansion.

Mr. Marburg was the speaker today at the noonday meeting of the commercial travelers' organization. He spoke to his audience of commercial travelers just as he would have done in addressing an audience of professional economists, opening his address as follows:

"I fear I have very little consolation to offer the traveling man. There is nothing that at present indicates his rehabilitation.

"To talk of abolishing trusts is as idle as to talk of abolishing newspapers or of breaking up the great trunk lines and restoring the many small systems that previously existed.

"The trust was born primarily of the fierce competitions between American manufacturers. If the tariff in any way conduced to it it was only by building up manufactures in America and providing the conditions for the competition. It was the competition, not the tariff, which produced the trust.

"The saving of the salaries of traveling salesmen is only one of the many economies effected by these great business consolidations. I have been a traveling man myself and know the economic waste involved in devoting one's time to the sale of a particular article in competition with hundreds of others whose time is exclusively employed in the offer of similar articles.

"As at present loosely organized the trusts present many objectionable features. These can be in a measure removed by organizing the trusts under a national law. We can demand of them publicity of accounts. We can recover for the people a part of their profit in the form of public revenue. The government might assume toward them an attitude similar to that of the German government toward the imperial bank. It might say to them: 'You must issue stock only to the extent of the actual cash invested in the business. You may make a net profit of 10 per cent, 12 per cent or 15 per cent, but all profits above that amount, whatever that amount may be you must share with us.'

"The government should take the lion's share of this excess. Industry has been going forward by leaps and bounds within the last generation. In all these economic changes a lot of labor is displaced. This is very hard on the individual, and it is poor consolation to him to know that society is the gainer, but such movements are simply inevitable, and the net result is unquestionably an immense social gain.

"The displacement of the traveling man is the result of an economic movement quite disconnected from politics. He will not better his position by voting for Mr. Bryan. What Bryan's victory would involve would be a great business depression, which would simply deprive the traveling man of what opportunity he may now possess to find employment in other fields."

THE SERVANT GIRL.

Pursuing a subject recently opened in these columns, a subscriber writes:

Though I never speak of our help as "our servant," yet I think it no disgrace to be designated as such; to serve anyone honorably and intelligently and in a capable manner, is appreciated by all who employ, and such a "servant" can at all times command the respect of their employers. Again, if any employer put undue stress upon "servant," be it in their presence or not, in speaking of the one who fills that responsible position, shows themselves to be no lady or gentleman.

But I would not brand them unladylike simply because they advertise for a "servant." By putting the advertisement in that way, no one that does not want to work will apply. If a lady wants a companion, she will advertise for one. Too many young girls look for work, find it, want to draw wages, but want to do only what is easy and let the mistress do the heavy work, or leave it undone. Those are the girls always complaining of the treatment they receive.

They never stay any place long, and continually speak ill of anyone they ever worked for. The good girl who is willing to work for what she gets, never has any complaint. Is respected, could get more places than she can fill, generally keeps a place a long time, and makes a good housekeeper in a home of her own.

I say it is no disgrace to be called a servant. We are all servants to some one.

A SERVANT.

Weak Lungs

When your throat and lungs are perfectly healthy you needn't worry about the germs of consumption. They don't attack healthy people. It's the weak, debilitated, inflamed membranes that are first affected. Hard coughs and colds weaken your throat and lungs and make consumption more easy.

If your lungs are weak

Scott's Emulsion

is the best remedy you can take. It soothes and heals and gives tone and strength to these delicate membranes. In this way you can prevent consumption. And you can cure it also if you haven't had it too long. Keep taking it until your lungs are strong and your weight restored.
