INAUGURATION DAY IN WASHINGTON.

McKinley the First President to Succeed Himself Since Grant.

CROWDS SHOW GREAT ENTHUSIASM

The Speech of Vice-President Roosevelt After He Took the Oath of Office, and President McKinley's Inaugural Address.

Washington, March 4.—William McKinley, of Ohio, today for the second time in his career took the oath as president of the United States. Not since the time when the republic indorsed another war president, General Grant, has a chief magistrate succeeded himself until the present time and not even was there such an imposing inaugural procession at Grant's second inaugural, nor were there so many spectators as today. Pennsylvania avenue, between the treasury building and the capitol was a kaleidoscopic mass of color. In addition to the dozen or more public reviewing stands there were hundreds of private structures in front of stores and buildings.

and congress. Briefly referring to the war and its results, he said it was signally favorable to American arms and in the highest degree honorable to the government. This victory imposed obligations which we cannot escape. "We are now at peace with the world and it is my fervent prayer that if differences arise between us and other powers that they may be settled by arbitration. Entrusted by the people for the second time in the office of president, I enter upon its administration, and appreciating the great responsibilities, I should shrink from the duties this day assumed if I did not feel that in their performance I should have the co-operation of the wise and patriotic men of all parties. We are united and sectionalism has disappeared. If there are those among us who would make our way more difficult we must not be disheartened but more earnestly dedicate ourselves to the task upon which we have righteously entered. The path of progress is seldom smooth. New things are often found hard to do. The republic has marched on and its every step has exalted human liberty. We are undergoing the same ordeal as did our predecessors, nearly a century ago. We are following the course they blazed. They triumphed. Will their successors falter and plead organic impotency in the nation?"

Referring to the status in Cuba the president said we must remain close friends with Cuba. "The declaration of the purpose of this government in the resolution of April 20, 1898, must be made good. The peace which we are pledged to leave the Cuban people must carry with it a guarantee of permanency. We became the sponsors for the pacification of the island and we remain accountable to the Cubans, no less than to our own country and people, for the reconstruction of Cuba as the free commonwealth on abiding foundations of right, justice, liberty and assured order."

As to the Philippine question. "Congress having added the sanction of its authority to the powers already exercised by the executive under the constitution, thereby leaving with the executive the responsibility of the government of the Philippines, I shall continue the efforts already begun until order shall be restored and, as fast as conditions permit, will establish local government. The full co-operation of the people of the islands has already been invited and when such government is established will encourage the people to administer it. Already something has been done in this direction. The most liberal terms of amnesty have already been communicated to the insurgents and the way is still open for those who have raised arms against the government for honorable submission to its authority. Our countrymen should not be deceived. We are not waging a war against the inhabitants of the islands. A portion of them are making war against the United States. Force will not be needed or used when those who make war against us shall make it no more. May it end without further bloodshed."

Great Enthusiasm. The enthusiasm was tremendous as the last words of the president died away. The presidential and vice presidential parties adjourned to the capitol, where a luncheon was served, while the troops of the civic bodies formed for the inaugural parade.

On reaching the White House grounds the president ascended the President McKinley's Address. The chief executive then began to read his inaugural address. Mr. McKinley began by saying that now, contrary to the situation four years ago, there was no anxiety as regards our currency and credit. "I have the satisfaction to announce that the congress just closed has reduced taxation in the sum of $40,000,000 annually."

He compared the depression in the industries four years ago to the present activity. The national verdict of 1896 has for the most part been executed. Whatever remains unfinished is a continuing obligation, resting with undiminished force upon the executive stand and watched the organizations go by.

This evening the crowds of people will view more marching and a great display of fireworks and attend the inaugural ball in the pension building.

CLOSING HOURS OF CONGRESS.

The River and Harbor Bill Talked to Death in the Senate.

Washington, March 4.—The closing hours of the fifty-sixth congress was characterized by the defeat of the river and harbor bill, which in the senate was talked to death by Carter, of Montana, while the bill was before that body in the shape of a conference report. A conference report on the sundry civil bill, with Bavallo and Charleston expositions appropriation omitted and the St. Louis appropriation remaining, was agreed to.

In the house the report on the sundry civil bill was also adopted and later the president signed the measure. The house passed the District of Columbia bill and one granting a charter to the National Federation of Women's Clubs. The house refused to yield to the senate on the river and harbor bill and it was sent back to the conference where it died.

"You Are So Slow."

If the woman at work should make answer to the other woman, she might, perhaps, say: "You never had to scrub and clean when your back ached so that it seemed that every movement would break it in two." It's bad enough for a woman to suffer. But when she must suffer and slave at the same time she reaches the limit of her endurance. Weak women who have been made strong by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, recommend it to others as a godsend. It establishes regularity, drives weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.
