DISAGREES WITH BOBBY BURNS.

Edward Seventh, king of England and emperor of India, serves notice on representatives of foreign powers that hereafter they must appear before him clad in the approved costume of the court. He remarks, in that connection, that his is not a republic, but a kingdom, hence these absurd requirements. How out of key with Bobby Burns' nobler tune sung in his immortal poem in which was proclaimed the truth that a "man's a man for a' that," even though the man be clad in meager garments and have not on him the guinea's stamp of rank. Certainly, in these days when kingly crowns are mere formalities, and rulers are rulers only when they perform the will of the people, King Edward's pronouncement sounds peculiarly enough.

However, the English monarch must needs do something to serve as an excuse for his occupancy of the throne, for, as all know, he reigns but does not rule. Beyond his personal influence as a prominent man in the kingdom and empire, Edward Seventh is no more, or not much more, a king, than is the common subject. Beneath the glitter and splendor of royalty is found little of the one-time power possessed by the English monarchs. This is suggested by the play recently given here, "Mary Stuart," in which the royal favor and disfavor counted for something. What an absurd figure a king would cut today, were he to attempt to consign to the block and axe the head of a rival!

Queen Victoria was potent in matters of public import, but she was potent more on account of her keen judgment of people and her fine diplomacy, than on account of the title prefixed to her name. Victoria exerted a powerful influence on the course of events during her long and brilliant reign, but it was her brain and not her crown that gave her the influence.

MR. THOMPSON'S STATUS.

D. P. Thompson, a defunct Portland politician, goes to Pendleton to get his views into a democratic newspaper concerning the political men and measures of his home city and of the state. Mr. Thompson's nature is so badly soured and his disposition has become so cynical that there is little attention paid to his expressions any more.—Salem Statesman.

How about this, anyway? Is little attention paid to D. P. Thompson's views on public questions in Oregon? Isn't it true that Mr. Thompson's views, and the views of those who think as he does, have been attended of late with considerable interest by the people of Portland and Multnomah county? Isn't it true that these views found expression by the election of a Multnomah legislative delegation almost solidly opposed to those who oppose Mr. Thompson? Isn't it true that the legislature refused to elect the senatorial candidate who represented opposition to Mr. Thompson and his political associates? Are not all these things true, though Mr. Thompson and his friends have not a newspaper as an exponent in Portland, the state's metropolis, and hence have no means of conveying to the public their views on public questions? Isn't it true that for all the time Major McKinley has occupied the White House he has paid more heed to what were obviously the wishes of Mr. Thompson, and those who think like him, than he has to the obvious wishes of Mr. Thompson's political enemies?

A newspaper continuing to print all the potential "Isn't it true?" in this connection, would need to obtain some new "sorts" to supply the letters spelling the query. The facts spoken of by Mr. Thompson are generally known to all who pay any heed to politics in Oregon. What statement of D. P. Thompson's in his interview with the Statesman deny? Mr. Thompson stands before the people of Oregon as one of its most prominent figures. He is potent in the commercial, financial and political affairs of the commonwealth. He is a truthful man, as all will concede. And his assertions were only the public saying of what most well informed men think.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The Oregon Native Son, an historical magazine published in Portland for the past two years, has suspended publication. It seems the people of the Northwest could muster up loyalty and love of home enough to keep alive at least one worthy publication of this character. California has her Overland Monthly, which has been alive for a quarter of a century. Oregon has as wide a field, as much native merit, and still will not support a magazine devoted to its history, settlement, pioneers and fireside stories. We lack something. Washington outstripped in the past decade in population and improvement. We must brush up. We need a shine, mentally and materially.

A periodical moral wave has again reached the Oregon town. Following the only righteous example set by the last lamented legislature, in abolishing slot machines, the cities of the state have begun a crusade on gambling. The "monte" man is on the move; the "sure thing wheel" is rolling to new pastures; the "21" fiend is looking for a job at plowing, and the "crap" shooter, white and black, is shot out into the cold. It is to be sincerely hoped that the change is permanent. We can get along without the gambler. He is a useless, harmful quantity in society, and while we don't want to annihilate him, we hope he will change his occupation, in the interest of the state, society and the future. Keep him moving southward.

The tendency toward the complete union of the east railway systems of the United States under one control is rapidly growing. It is the natural outgrowth of the trust doctrine. Next come the coal combine, the flour combine, the meat combine, and others which fix the production and the price of every necessity of life. It is the day of the "big man." If you are not "big" you would just as well be dead.

The ancient, priceless treasures and jewels which have been looted from the Chinese palace are the most wonderful specimens in existence. For four thousand years these curios have been accumulating, and no money value can be set upon them. The Chinese Empire loses its chief charm in being deprived of them.

Gov. Geer, in his last message, refers to the vast accumulation of public documents and reports, in the basement of the capitol building. It might be a wise plan to furnish every school district in the state with a small library, consisting of one volume each, of these public documents. It would be much better to do this with these valuable books, than to allow them to lie in disuse. Current history and more liberal diffusion of general knowledge might be instilled into Oregon schools, with good results. We move that these unused documents be distributed among the school districts. Do we hear a second?

The scientists are going to throw the cooks out of a job. The experiments in condensing the essence of foodstuff into capsules are very successful. Within another decade, the household's entire larder will consist of a box of food pills and a bucket of water. These food pills, which are made of these dried down, produce music in the incandescent globe, will further enrich us. We can take a couple of capsules and a glass of water for supper, turn on the electric light, and lie down to dream under the spell of the most exhilarating music. It will be a boon for the bachelor. Boarding house keepers will be on the "bum," Piano peddlers will find their occupation gone, and the cook will stand in the Cairo corner with the spinning wheel, the ox yoke and the stage coach.

To those unacquainted with the details of running a railroad, the story of a boxcar, in all its wanderings, wrecks, repairs, and hilling from place to place, from system to system, with its various records in the general offices of different companies, its flat wheels, broken draw bars, lanky triangle valves, and the volume of signs, figures and characters in chalk marks upon its sides, which only a trainman can decipher, would form an interesting chapter of reading matter.

A crown is a terrible thing to wear. The czar can't even go to a croquet show, without being subjected to threats and attempts on his life. Even an Oregon farmer is blessed with more safety than this, and not one in a thousand of them ever saw a crown.

There is an old English legend which relates the story of the month of March, borrowing three days from April, and in an ancient rhyme, "The Complaint of Scotland," these three days are described as follows:

The first (it shall be wind and wet);
The next (it shall be snow and sleet);
The third (it shall be rain and frost);
Shall get the bird's neck to the frost.

If Oregon is to be divided, let us immortalize in another manner the man who made the Louisiana purchase, of which Oregon was a part, (though disputed by England and France East-ern Oregon the state of Jefferson.

BERT HUFFMAN.

MEN THEIR OWN RAIN-MAKERS.

"It may be bad for a fellow's faith in Providence, but it's mighty good for crops," was the way in which one Westerner explained the advantages of irrigation. "It gets him out of the habit of looking to a Higher Power for his agricultural necessities. When he wants a gentle shower he goes out and opens his head-gate a little, and he gets it; when he wants a down-pour he opens the head-gate wider and floods his land; and when he wants the rain to stop he shuts his head-gate and it stops. If he wants rain on his meadow and none on his alfalfa, another combination of head-gates brings the desired results. The irrigation farmer has no fears of his meadow drying up, or of his oats rotting because of too much rain, and hence he never delays his potato planting. In fact, the farmer whose showers are regulated by head-gates is the most independent agriculturist in existence, providing—"

Yes, providing,—For even in such an apparently ideal system as regulating one's agricultural necessities by head-gates there are a lot of things that have to be considered. Providing a dry season does not make the river so low that no irrigation material can be coaxed into the canal; or providing the July freshet does not carry out the main head-gate just at the season when the irrigation is most needed. Providing some other rancher, located far up the valley, does not exhaust the entire stream, leaving only a dry creek bed to wind past your improvements; or providing the rancher farther down the stream does not secure an injunction to prevent your use of the prescribed number of "gates." It is to which you are certain that you are morally, but to which you cannot prove that you are legally, entitled.

But even these uncertainties cannot be compared with the variableness of the New England or Mississippi valley climates. And there are advantages in farming by irrigation that lead the farmer who once becomes accustomed to the method to look with suspicion on dependence on Nature's bestowal of moisture.—Harry Newton Gardner in Modern Culture Magazine for April.

SAVES LIFE

WILLARD, Ill., August 1, 1900.
I was in bad health this spring and could not sit up in bed for four weeks. When I was confined my child died. When I began to sit up I felt so weak and had such terrible pains in my back and hips. I had kidney trouble and falling of the womb. I also had hysterical spells. "Ladies' Health Almanac" and read the advertisement of Wine of Cardui and Theodor's Black-Draught. Since April 20th, I have taken four bottles of Wine of Cardui and three packages of Theodor's Black-Draught. I feel like a new person now. I can do all my work and can walk out to see any of my neighbors. I believe I would have been in the grave had it not been for Wine of Cardui. IT SAVED MY LIFE.
Mrs. ALICE DAVIS.

It is well that women are more patient than men. Few men could bear the bitter pangs, the agony and distress that women endure. Thousands of women have come to look upon suffering as a duty of their sex. But there are many instances of this heroic fortitude which now renders unnecessary. Women need no longer suffer for modesty's sake. Wine of Cardui brings relief to modest women in the privacy of their homes. Many of the best homes in this city are never without this great medicine. It cures white and falling of the womb and completely eradicates these dragging periodical pains. Mrs. Davis' cure shows you conclusively what you may expect if you follow her example and take Wine of Cardui. Theodor's Black-Draught aids Wine of Cardui by regulating the stomach and bowels. When you ask your druggist for these medicines, be sure you get them. It was Wine of Cardui and Theodor's Black-Draught that saved Mrs. Davis' life. Never take a substitute.
