ENGLAND AGAINST AMERICAN MEATS

Dressed Beef for Army No Longer Bought Here.

WASHINGTON INQUIRES ABOUT IT

Packers Allege It Will Make Little Difference. England Explains That It is to Protect Her Industries.

Chicago, April 12.—Arthur Meeker, general manager of Armour & Co., this morning confirmed the news that the British government has decided to discontinue the use of American dressed beef in the army. "The contract for dressed beef is not very large," said Meeker, "and the new rule will have very little effect on Chicago packers. We send great quantities of canned beef to the British army in South Africa, and will continue to do so, as the contemplated change does not affect canned beef. The people of England consume 300,000,000 pounds of our dressed beef annually. The proposed restriction will have no effect on this trade."

Another packer explained that England has been buying cattle in Argentina and shipping them to South Africa, finding it cheaper.

Washington's View. The action of the British government excluding dressed beef except the home article for the use of the army, is believed here to be predicated on the tying up at New Orleans of the recent shipment of horses and mules designed for South Africa, not as a retaliatory step, but for the purpose of protecting the government against annoyance and delay in the shipment of food supplies. The department of agriculture as yet has received no official information from England, and it is not known whether it is the purpose of the government eventually to exclude all American meats, dead or alive. It is feared, however, this instance is a step in that direction.

To Protect Their Industries. London, April 12.—At the British war office today, the director-general of contracts declared that the order relating to American beef was issued in the interest of British and Irish agricultural stock raising industries.

The U. S. Wants to Know. Washington, April 12.—At the request of the agricultural department, Secretary Hay today called Ambassador Choate at London asking him to find out why American meats are to be shut out from British army contracts.

The Cabinet Discussed It. Washington, April 12.—The cabinet today discussed the beef question, and agreed that the action in the New Orleans court in tying up the mule shipment was a mistake. Attorney-General Knox will probably render a decision pointing out the proper course to be pursued.
