HE BUILT LASTING CHARACTER.

From all parts of Oregon come copies of the state press containing accounts of the death of Lewis Berkeley Cox. In every instance accompanying them are editorial expressions according to the late distinguished citizen a place occupied by few persons in the state.

He had won universal love and honor by a life of strength, and that which is correlative, or rather its causation, purity. L. B. Cox was a man who lived on a plane far above that on which men commonly are content to remain. His was no ambition merely to secure wealth, position, fame. He had no sordid aims, albeit he was reasonably diligent in winning money from the game of life. His farewell message to all his friends, which appeared in the East Oregonian, was that of a man who cared for his fellowman, who acknowledged that he owed a debt to the world, and who was willing to pay it. He found pleasure in helping his fellows, in making a pathway pleasanter, a burden lighter, a heart less sad. To him, this world was an epoch in an eternity, therefore it must be lived earnestly, carefully, thoughtfully. To him, men and women were of feelings and sensibilities, hence he was careful lest he needlessly wound them. He was thoughtful, tender, considerate.

But he was more than this. He was a lion in courage. He stood for his convictions. How few are they who do this! How many those who fear another's censure! But L. B. Cox feared only the censure of his own conscience and his own better nature. These approving, he would stand against the world.

Few there are who have made the real success in life attained by L. B. Cox, not a success from a material point of view. But real success, the success that makes for eternity.

There need be no haste in writing a memoir of L. B. Cox. Today as well as yesterday. Tomorrow as well as today. A week, a month, a year after his death, it matters not. His works remain, remain imperishable, for he built that which nothing outlasts, character, lasting character, a character fit for what may come to man after passing from time to the mysteries of the great beyond.

QUESTION OF LEASING.

Some form of law for leasing public grazing lands will be enacted. This is just as inevitable as that the range country will be more thickly settled than it now is. And the very fact of an incoming host of homeseekers will force the enactment of laws to prevent the frequent troubles between men who are crowding each other with their bands of livestock.

It may be distasteful to the western sheep and cattle owners. Since the earliest years of settlement, grazing lands have been free to all comers. Vast fortunes have been made. Enormous quantities of meat foods have been supplied from the West, under a regime that demanded no rental from the flockmaster or cattle owner. This has accustomed them to look upon government lands as their own, subject not to the same laws that govern the disposition of lands fit for agriculture and fruit raising. An amicable agreement in favor of leasing the range never would be reached, were it not for the collision and quarrel among the livestock men themselves. Throughout the range country shooting affairs occur with too great frequency. Perhaps the majority are caused by encroachments of one man on that which is another's claim, as his own particular range, and the resentment resulting from invasion of that which is regarded as almost a vested right.

These killings are doing more to force a leasing law than is any other one thing. Arguments as to necessity of preserving the range from spoliation of the grasses have not half the weight of these bloody encounters between men who strive to keep what is theirs only by a "lex non scripta" or unwritten law.

One consideration will weigh, and weigh heavily with all fair minded persons. This is the claim of the settler in the range country to a portion of grazing land near his homestead. Everyone will admit that it is hard, indeed, for him to be crowded to his very doors by stock owners who come from a distance and who would leave no grass beyond the homestead act.

FUTURE OF ALASKA.

It may be truly said, and without boasting, that Alaska and the Yukon territory have a greater wealth of mineral resources than all of the United States and Canada combined. This is a broad statement and may be thought that we are going outside of conservative limits. But this wonderfully rich country has not attracted the attention of men of capital until a comparative recent date, and now that her wonderful properties are becoming known in the centers of the world's commerce, Alaska and the British Yukon are rapidly taking the lead.

Apart from her large, valuable placers, she has mountains of mineral bearing quartz, rich in gold, silver and copper. With increased transportation facilities and modern methods of treating the base ores, she will soon make this vast mineral wealth pour into the avenues of commerce. Reader, take any map of Alaska, put your finger on the southeast end of Prince of Wales island, then draw your finger along the inside passage till you come to Skagway, the head of Lynn canal. You will observe that you pass over a country more than a thousand miles long by several hundred miles wide, mainland and islands, with more than 12,000 miles of shore line.

In areas larger than three mining states. Along this same line is the great highway of commerce, over which all the supplies and machinery pass to the vast interior. Every few miles along this route and the outlying sub-districts you will find mines, either in their first stages of development, or the completely developed ones having reduction works with the latest modern improvements, one of which is the largest stamp mill in the world. This district, just described, is called Southeastern Alaska. It is one of the grand divisions of the great northland. Within this division are the numerous and prosperous sub-districts such as Cook's Inlet, Prince William Sound, Copper River, Yakutat, Juneau, Prince of Wales Island, Copper Mountain, Helm Bay, Berners Bay, Seward, Ketchikan, Snettisham, Porepine and Lynn canal, with smaller ones too numerous to mention. The value of the quartz mine development of these districts, in a commercial sense, is almost incalculable. Each year brings from them increased demand for supplies and mining machinery. All told, there are now dropping in this district 1254 stamps.

The official figures tell us that for the year 1900 Alaska produced over $4,000,000, and the British Yukon nearly $20,000,000, making a total of $24,500,000. This gold is worth far more to the country than the amount drawn hither from other countries in settlement of trade balances. It is a new supply for the world's need, not merely a portion of the present stock, shifted from one quarter to the other. It is a tangible addition to the money of the world, yet but little attention is being paid by editors of mining journals published outside of the present district to the effect upon the country of the Alaska and British Yukon gold supply.

At the present rate of development of the gold resources of Alaska and the British Yukon, however, their source of supply cannot long be overlooked. The Klondike is already producing nearly twenty millions annually; the Cape Nome district may show a still higher record within a year or so, and recent discoveries indicate that there are other districts coming into production which will rival both the Klondike and Nome. So far the produce of gold in Alaska came largely from the placer fields. The quartz mines are in their early stage of development. Before the known placers are exhausted, however, their place will be more than taken by the quartz mines, and within the present decade Alaska and the British Yukon will rival the Rand and Australia, and materially aid in placing the United States and Canada in the first and second positions among the gold producers of the world.—Alaska-Yukon Mining Journal.

THE CONVERSION OF PHILLIPS.

Even Father Phillips has fallen under the hypnotic influence of J. Pierpont Morgan. A touch of the coal baron's evil hand sent inexorable thrills down the clerical spine and Father Phillips in a second was under the spell of the great finance wizard's eye. To the priest it seemed that that eye looked clear through him and by a flash from it he perceived that Morgan is "a friend of mankind."

It is strange that Father Phillips was so slow in finding this out. Others have known that Mr. Morgan was a friend of mankind all along. Every move of his has been purely philanthropic. His gobble of railways, higher rates and stiffer dividends, but by a passionate longing to serve humanity. His swallowing of the steel industry was suggested, not by an ambition to crush competition and to enhance the cost of steel to consumers, but by his yearning to serve labor. And now his grip upon the great anthracite coal fields which God created for his special benefit is held, not to extort tribute from the freezing, not to swell the unearned profits of monopoly, but that he may thus become the "great mediator" between cormorant Capital and needy Labor.

"Morgan is the greatest man I ever met," said Father Phillips. "I look upon him with wonder. In the few minutes I was with him he reached my innermost thoughts before I could express them."

So it seems that in Morgan is something more than a touch of the divine. He knew what I wanted to say, and said it better than I could. He got at the very truth of the matter in a flash—something that Father Phillips has never done at all. "I had dreaded that interview with Mr. Morgan. I feared him as a great capitalist. But the moment he grasped my hand my fears were gone."

"In an instant I knew he was a friend of mankind who could be trusted. I do not believe a higher minded, more conscientious man than he exists today. I have been a student of human nature all my life, and I know I have been correct in summing up the character of Mr. Morgan."

"He is the great mediator between capital and labor." Let no man hereafter dare to cavil at the great Morgan or question his benevolent motives. Let no one think of the higher price of coal, the higher cost of steel or of any other of the trivial incidents of Morgan's superb philanthropic activities. He is a friend of mankind. He is a mindreader—one able to read the simple mind of a poor preacher who looked upon his banker as a heathen might upon his fellow who, in spirit at least, straightway cracked the pregnant hinges of the knee before the lordly plutocrat whose glance may have had in it some delicate suggestion of how thrift may follow fawning.

In any event Father Phillips becomes the apostolic herald of the vine and fig tree magnate. One hand grasped did the business. Saul of Tarsus was not more miraculously converted. On one supreme instant the scales fell from the clerical eyes and they saw Morgan no longer as in a glass darkly, but in the naked beauty of his noble character.

And this the world is put under a debt of gratitude to Father Phillips. No one can question his estimate. It lifts Morgan to a niche among the elect and there let him shine.—Johnstown Democrat.

Scrofula

Scrofula is but a modified form of Blood Poison and Consumption. The parent who is tainted by either will see in the child the same disease manifesting itself in the form of swollen glands of the neck and throat, catarrh, weak eyes, offensive sores and abscesses and oftentimes white swelling—sure signs of Scrofula. There may be no external signs for a long time, for the disease develops slowly in some cases, but the poison is in the blood and will break out at the first favorable opportunity. S. S. S. cures this wasting, destructive disease by first purifying and building up the blood and stimulating and invigorating the whole system.

J. M. Seal, 115 Public Square, Nashville, Tenn., says: "Ten years ago my daughter fell and cut her forehead. From this wound the glands of the side of her face became swollen and burst. Some of the best doctors here and elsewhere attended her without any benefit. We decided to try S. S. S., and a few bottles cured her entirely."

SSS makes new and pure blood to nourish and strengthen the body, and is a positive and safe cure for Scrofula. It overcomes all forms of blood poison, whether inherited or acquired, and it remedies so thoroughly and effectively cleanses the blood. If you have any blood trouble, or your child has inherited some blood taint, take S. S. S. and get the blood in good condition and prevent the return of further damage.

Start Girls Right!

Many beautiful girls become invalids for life, because at the crucial period of puberty they pay no attention to the laws of health. Mothers should protect their daughters' health by giving them necessary information and proper treatment. When the menses come on a girl unawares in her inexperience she is either frightened into convulsions, or scared into trying to check the flow. Many girls have checked the flow and it has never started again. And as a result they have grown pale-faced, with "crow-tracks" on their cheeks, and dark half-moons under their eyes. A dose of taken every morning after a girl is twelve years old will bring the menses on properly and keep them regular. It will help her to develop into attractive womanhood and equip her for the duties of wife and motherhood. All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

The Hollywood, Ashbury Park, N. J., February 2, 1900. I read your advertisement in regard to Wine of Cardui in the Baltimore American, and it so favorably impressed me that on my visit to Baltimore during the holidays I purchased a bottle of it for my adopted daughter, who was suffering with female troubles. She had been under the doctor's care for some time, and when her periods would come on her suffering was something terrible. I induced her to try it and the first dose brought on her menses. She took it regularly according to the directions, and was greatly relieved. To use her own words, "It saved my life." J. WESLEY CROSS.
