TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

Here is an editorial endorsement of Joe Simon by a democratic paper, the Salem Journal:

There is a great deal of fly-biting for the nomination for governor a year from now and it is a good thing to set the people thinking what kind of a man they want in that office. It is also well to consider what are the right dimensions for aspirants for their offices. The next legislature elects a senator and there will undoubtedly be a hard fight to defeat Senator Simon on the part of the Mitchell faction. Republicans generally are tired of the factional fights, but the grater element never tire of contentions that throw places open for the class who afterwards cost good money to investigate and prosecute. It would be a godsend to Oregon politics if it had a man in his prime who could be sent to the senate and kept there for 20 years and become a source of power and credit to the state. Senator Simon is that kind of a man, and will be a candidate, but of course, the Mitchell faction will fight him and do all in their power to render him unavailable.

In the language of the immortal Chimney Fadden, wouldn't it jar you? It is far worse than democratic support of Mr. Mitchell, who is really half a democrat, anyway, and has about as many friends in the democratic party as in the republican.

Here is a more correct view of Simon by another Salem paper, the Sentinel:

It looks very much as if Hon. C. W. Fulton would give Simon a merry race for his seat in the senate a year from next winter. The sincerity of the Oregonian's support of Simon is questioned, especially should Mr. Corbett decide to again become a candidate. But this Mr. Corbett has not yet done; neither has he said that he would not be a candidate. Those who are in a position to know give it out that Mr. Corbett will apply for the place himself. He realizes now that Simon tricked him out of it at the special session and there is little reason to doubt that he will attempt next spring to secure the nomination and election of candidates to the legislature who are known to be friendly to his cause. The thing may develop into an interesting three cornered fight.

Portland's attention is respectfully called to this from the Olympian, printed in the capital of Washington:

Chief of Police Savage was busy yesterday issuing notice to various property owners to remove the moss from the roofs of their buildings. No specified time for the removal of the moss is mentioned in the notice, as it is a hard matter at present to secure men to do the work, and it is not desired to work a hardship on the property owner for this season. But it is the intention of the council to have the moss removed as soon as possible under the circumstances.

Portland might issue such an order at once, and, with reasonable haste for that somewhat mossgrown town, secure execution of it by the time the Lewis & Clark centennial opens its gates in 1905. But, who that visits Portland would not feel homesick if there the moss were less conspicuous?

A man stole 1600 pounds of brass castings from a railroad company in the Dalles, and was not prosecuted. Another stole $1.62 worth of cigars from the Hood River hotel. He was held to answer. "Indignant" wrote to the Dalles Chronicle protesting that this was an example of injustice that was disgraceful to Wasco county. The Chronicle says the following, a very pertinent observation, indeed:

A subscriber takes the Chronicle to task for publishing "indignant's" letter in yesterday's issue, containing strictures on the administration of Wasco county justice, with special reference to the continuance of Ike Moore's case and his admission to bail in the paltry sum of $300.

The Chronicle has no apology to offer for its action, and is not in the least sorry for what it did in the premises. When the Chronicle cannot afford to publish the truth it had better wrap the drapery of its couch about it and lie down in an eternal sleep. "Indignant's" protest was just and timely. Justice in Wasco county, in numerous cases during the last quarter of a century, has been a ridiculous farce.

The Chronicle has personal recollection of numerous cases where men were not only notoriously guilty of crimes against the law, but were actually adjudged guilty in the courts who, because they had a pull with the legal authorities, never suffered for a moment for their crimes. The record is an ugly one and would not look well in print, but it is available and if it is very badly wanted can be produced.

Instances of a kind with this have been known in Umatilla county.

The same paper has a fling at the excursion to Buffalo attended by 20 or 30 representatives of Oregon newspapers: It is the lot the real newspaper men and women of Oregon to be grinding out copy for the printers while the journalists of the state are gallivanting towards Buffalo to attend the alleged National Editors Association, in which real editors are as scarce as hens' teeth.

Why do not Oregon republicans, led by the Portland Oregonian, take up the cudgel in defense of Governor Geer, and "vindicate" him of the Plummer penitentiary superintendent $1000 charge now going from one end of the state to the other. The Salem Sentinel intimates that Geer is to be turned down in this manner:

At this time there is but very little doing in the political arena of Oregon. Geer is a candidate for renomination for governor, and it is conceded everywhere that he can't "save the wood." He cannot have the Marion county delegation, and with that against him he will stand no show in the state convention. It looks now very much as if his name would not get before the convention.

And here is a red-hot republican paper, La Grande Chronicle, that gives a vicious jab at the governor. Reprinting this item from the Baker City Republican, the Chronicle makes the subjoined remark:

The people of Eastern Oregon will appreciate the fact that Governor Geer declined all other invitations and accepted the one asking him to speak at Baker City on July Fourth. As much as possible, all nearby towns should join Baker in honoring our natal day, guided and directed by Oregon's chief executive, who is recognized as a most interesting speaker.—Republican.

All Eastern Oregon centered at Baker the people might appreciate the great renunciation of the governor, but as there are a half dozen towns in this part of the state capable of putting up as fine a celebration as that which the mining town will have, the governor's choice seems to have been made on the basis of first come first served.—Chronicle.

CAN A LEGISLATURE COMMIT MURDER?

Does the act of committing murder, always consist in taking a gun, a club, a sand bag or a knife, going out and hunting up one victim with the blood of another, and then proceeding to slay him with promeditated malice? Is there not an indirect, roundabout way of committing this crime? Can it be possible that the act of a legislative body, either of commission or omission, may cause this crime to be committed? This is a question in social economics which we do not often stop to consider. It is out of the usual order of things. We look upon murder as a wanton crime, committed by one or more individuals, with an evil intent. We feel that it actually consists in slaying one victim with the blood of a fellow man. We do not associate it with the acts of a city council, county court or state legislature. This seems incongruous.

But let us consider a moment. There is a phase of the question which should cause every honest minded lawmaker to consider long and well before passing upon a matter of public interest, which involves the risk of human life. Back of his actions, in a public capacity, stands the possibility of a long train of evils. He has it in his hands to make better or worse the conditions which surround society. He is the medium through which the public draws its measure of justice. Let us cite an instance and ask a question.

At the last session of the Oregon legislature, the railway employees presented a measure, compelling all railroad companies to block up with wooden blocks, all angles in switches, frogs and crossings of railroad tracks. Numerous instances were presented to the legislature to show where employees had caught their feet in these angles, and had been run over and instantly killed. It was shown that the blocking of these angles, with expensive task; that the companies neglected it for no other reason, than that there was no law forcing them to do this.

Mr. W. W. Cotton, the company attorney, told the legislature, when speaking on the subject, in plain language, that it was a humane law; that the companies would gladly comply with its requirements, and that from a humane standpoint he hoped they would enact it. He told them that old employees, the most sober, most careful, most intelligent of their men, often stepped into this "death trap" in the discharge of their duties, were run over, mangled and killed in the full flower of manhood, in the possession of their faculties, with open eyes and the full realization of their fate. There remained no excuse on the part of the legislature for refusing to pass such a law, other than that it carried the companies' passes in its pocket, and was determined not to pass a measure opposed to railroad interests. In less than two months after the adjournment of the legislature, Mr. G. M. Daily, a switchman at Huntington, Oregon, caught his foot in an unblocked frog, was thrown down and dragged to a horrible death by the switch engine.

This man was engaged in a legitimate calling and was entitled to all reasonable protection by society. He was sober, careful, dutiful and industrious, but in a hurry to do his work well for his employer, he stepped between the car and engine, was caught and killed, after his fellows and associates had asked in vain for a small measure of just protection, at the hands of the legislature.

Let us turn to the vote on housebill No. 80, and see how the vote stands, is this murder, or is it not?

REIT HOFFMAN.

THE WORSHIP OF THE GOLDEN CALF.

When I saw a dying broker clutch the cyphered tape at the ticker as he watched his fortune sobbing away; when the madman throng, in their frenzy lost to all sense of the mystery of life and death, hustled out the body of the dead broker that there might be more room for stampede in the sagging market; when the gilded sign was erased from the marble slab, announcing another failure; when I saw strong men tremble with lip and eyelid, and burst into tears; when I saw the baggard faces of grey-haired women in weeds and the fading blight upon the beauty of American girls; when the storm of wild and pitiless shrieks filled the air, I thought if I these scenes and emotions were connected with anything else—it would be called religious or political fanaticism.

We call it trade—business—financial "operations;" the genius of gambling is defined and on the altar glitters the grinning Golden Calf. Frequent mention may be made of the hand-writing flashed forth on the heavy clouds, proclaiming to vaulting ambition, o'er leaping itself. "The National Magazine" for June.

THE BRAVEST BATTLE.

The bravest battle that ever was fought, Shall I tell you where and when? Go, strong man, the sword you will find it not. 'Twas fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot, With sword or noble pen; Nay, not with eloquent words or thoughts, From mouths of wonderful men.

Not deep in a well-up woman's heart, Of a woman who would not yield, But bravely, slowly here bet part, Lo, there is that battle field!

No marching troop, no live-once song, No banner to gleam and wave, But bravely, slowly here bet part, From babyhood to the grave!

Yet faithful will as a bridge of stars, The faithful in her walk-up town Fight on in her heart, and there, Then silent, steepest, goes down.

O, ye with banners and battle shot, And soldiers in shirt and prayer, I tell you in her heart, and there, Were fought in those silent ways.

O, spotless woman in a world of shame! With splendid and silent scorn, Go back to her heart, and there, The kindest warrior born!
