SUGGESTIONS TO THE CUBANS.

For a preamble to their constitution. "We, the people of the island of Cuba, (at the dictation of the president of the United States, coerced by the presence of thousands of troops of that imperialistic pseudo republic, and scared to death lest we be forcibly annexed or benevolently assimilated (or words to that effect if we refuse the demands of the step-mother country,) in order to form a more perfect (adjunct to the) union (of those good states), establish justice (according to the views of Major McKinley,) insure domestic tranquility (by submitting to terms we cannot refuse unless we be blown into the middle of next week,) provide for the common defense (against the quartering of foreign soldiers upon us as a King George in older times when the colonies protested and fought heroically for eight years to free themselves from such oppression,) promote the general welfare (of the people of the domain of King William de Canton,) and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, (said liberty to be of the kind bearing the brand of twentieth century freedom,) do ordain and establish this constitution of the republic of Cuba.

"Amendments, Article I—We hereby adopt the Platt amendment, absolutely and unequivocally turning over the direction of the affairs of this glorious new republic to the sometime republic new empire of the United States, with the mental reservation that, if the God of Justice ever vindicate his character for equity, we shall tell the bawling nation to the northwest of us to go to the demitison bow wows and return to allegiance of the kingdom of Spain."

CHANCE TO EDUCATE EASTERNERS.

Eastern people, as a class, are ignorant of the resources of the west. Few of them ever come far away from the Atlantic. Of the teeming millions inhabiting the tier of states along the eastern coast, not one in ten thousand has been so far towards the setting sun as Ohio. To them a trip to Chicago would be an adventure. St. Paul is an Indian infested town. Omaha and Kansas City are places where crudity and wildness reign supreme. Denver is inhabited only by booted and spurred cowboys and miners. Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane are just on the verge of the jumping off place. Of San Francisco, those of the "effete" have heard favorably. Los Angeles is to some extent shorn of its terrors.

When these facts are taken into account, it is not strange that the west suffers injustice at the hands of congress. Money has been poured out in rich profusion to improve the waterways of the east and the middle west. The Great Lakes route during late years has received recognition, although many a year of struggle was necessary before the dominant east would make concessions.

This should accentuate the importance of showing the river and harbor committee of the national house every attention when they come into this region this month. Eastern Oregon and Washington and Idaho cannot afford to neglect them. Pendleton, Walla Walla, Baker City, La Grande, Boise, Lewiston, all should recognize their visit.

THEY TALKED TOO MUCH.

Everyone will sigh with relief now that President McKinley has settled the third term question. He was forced to take the position of absolutely declining to stand as a candidate, by the New York senator, Chauncey Depew, and the Ohio congressman, Charles H. Grosvenor, who like the parrot, had too much to say. Those voluble statesmen, rebuked as they were by Mr. McKinley himself, must feel somewhat like that other parrot who was blown one thousand feet into the air by a dynamite explosion, and alighting minus several dozen tail feathers and otherwise battered up, remarked sadly, but in a tone to indicate recently acquired wisdom: "I guess the trouble with me is that I talk too damned much."

SEND ON THE EXHIBIT.

Umatilla county has an excellent opportunity to show to Oregon what is produced here. The officials of the state fair have visited Pendleton and urged the sending of an exhibit to compete for the prize offered for the best county display, agricultural and horticultural, quality and variety considered, and produced in 1901. They were encouraged to think the exhibit would be sent, and have consequently made the announcement. The remainder of the commonwealth has in a general way an idea of the resources of this county. But not in many years has any attention been paid to showing the products at fairs and expositions. The competition afforded in getting up these displays is healthful in its effects, engendering local pride and moving to improvement in productive methods. O. R. Ballou, of Milton, if he accept the task of arranging the exhibit, will be competent to make Umatilla's county's chances for success as good as those of any county in the state. Persistence may well mark the efforts of those who have the matter in hand.

TOLSTOI'S BROTHERHOOD OF MAN.

The newspapers and reviews have been full of Count Tolstai lately. I have read several editorials within a week in our principal dailies, either praising or condemning his ideas, but all of them bearing testimony unconsciously to his importance. His excommunication by the Russian church has raised a storm in Russia, and hundreds of students in the universities have petitioned the Holy Synod to excommunicate them along with him. It is doubtful if that honorable body has ever before received such a communication, and we may imagine how such an expression of disrespect has disturbed the authorities. We read in one dispatch that Count Tolstai has been exiled and conducted across the frontier into Germany by two sergeants. In another we are told that he has been ordered not to leave his country house at Yasnaya Polyana, six hours by rail south of Moscow. It is not easy to verify news from Russia, and confirmation of either of these reports is lacking, but I think it quite likely that the latter is correct. I do not believe that the Russian government will banish Tolstai, for they are afraid of the public opinion of the world. They know that Tolstai is the most distinguished of Russians, that his books are read all over the world; that he is an old man of seventy-two, and feeble in health at that; and they think right when they surmise that the whole civilized world would protest if he were expelled from the country in which he has won such distinction. When I visited the Tolstois some years ago, one of his daughters told me that after the publication of each of his books, they always expected for a time to be sent to Siberia, but that they had heard that the late czar (who was then living) had forbidden his name to be mentioned at court, and had stated that his only reason for not punishing him was that people then looked upon him as an apostle, but if he were exiled, they would regard him as a martyr.

What are the crimes for which Tolstai deserves punishment and excommunication? His great offense is that he has told the truth as he sees it fearlessly in season and out of season. Although he was born a nobleman, and might have taken a prominent part in ruling his country, he has denounced the brutal force which controls the empire, and declared that no man is good enough to command another. Notwithstanding his wealth and honors he has protested against the evils of the unjust distribution of property, against the absurdities of caste and rank, and the false distinctions of society. In spite of his large landed estates he has followed Henry George in claiming that every child born into the world should have a share in the heritage provided by the Creator. An officer who has taken a prominent part in the absolutely condemned war as a survivor of barbarous times, and preaches the doctrine of Jesus, that it is better to turn the other cheek than to return a blow.

Formerly a keen sportsman and an accomplished shot, today he is a rigid vegetarian, because he disapproves of the taking of life when such act is totally unnecessary. In short, Tolstai's crime is that he really loves his neighbor as himself, or at any rate seriously tries to, and includes among his neighbors his own enemies and those of his country as well as the whole brute creation. He does not believe in loving people with bomb-shells or high rents or law-suits, or tax gatherers, or any other of the curious ways we have of showing our neighborly affection. Tolstai used to be a man of fashion. He used to play cards at the club every afternoon, and won and lost a good deal of money that way. He used to be fond of the opera and of dinner parties and of entertaining and being entertained by the great people of Moscow. But when he acquired the odd notion of loving his neighbor as himself, he was seized by a feeling of disgust for his fine raiment and his retinue of servants, and at once determined to give the whole thing up.

When at fifty years of age Tolstai found the clue of right-living in a robust, manly love for his kind (of which his youthful philanthropy had been a faint prophesy), he at first tried to satisfy his new desires by ordinary charity and set to work to found a society for distributing the superfluous wealth of the rich among the poor as alms. From the first his plan did not succeed; the giving of money did not draw the hearts of the poor to him but rather held them apart, and ingratitude and complaint were only too common. What was the trouble? It was another little dramatic event that revealed the truth to him. As he was walking one day with two poor men, they passed a beggar, and each of the three took out a small copper coin and put it in the beggar's hand. This simple act at once set Tolstai to thinking. "It looks," said he to himself, "as if we three were each doing the same thing, but we were not. This man on my right had to work hard for a certain length of time to earn that coin; he was giving his own work; he is very poor, and needs every penny he has. Tonight at supper he will have to go without some—not luxury—but necessity, because he gave that money away. He was really depriving himself of something when he gave it.

"Now what was I doing? In the first place I have so much money that I don't know whether I have that coin or not. I couldn't possibly miss it. It doesn't deprive me of anything to give it. And then, where did I get it? Did I earn it? No, indeed, it was part of the rent of one of my farms in the country. All that I have had to do with that coin was to take it out of the pocket of a peasant in the country and put it into the hat of a peasant in the city. That is all I have had to do with it." And from this trifling event Tolstai went on thinking until he built up an entirely new theory of charity, and concluded that only the gift of our own earnings, our own work, and furthermore of something that make us exercise self-denial,—that only such giving and no other deserved the name of Christian alms-giving. Others might find satisfaction in collecting the extra wealth of the very rich to distribute it among the very poor; he would not raise a finger to stop it,—but for him, Tolstai, such charity, founded on difference in caste and rank and accepting the injustices of the world as heaven-born arrangements, was altogether insufficient. He would devote his life instead to the task of making people awake to the fact that all men are brothers, and should live together in a brotherly way, without the assumption of superiority which charity implies, and with a just love as the foundations of society.—Ernest H. Crosby, in the June Pilgrim.
