JULIA WOULDN'T HAVE HIM.

Romance has come into the life of lulia Torppia, spinster. In a most unexpected manner. Julia is blue-eyed, blonde and dimpled. Incidentally she looks after the culinary troubles in the home of J. T. Ross, of the firm of Ross, Higgins & Co. She is a plump little maid from the land of the vikings who knows more of the lan-guage of cupid than of the twisted and tangled mases of idiomatic English.

tangled mases of idiomatic English.

But to the romance in question.

Somewhere in the Hood river district, presumably in a lonely spot, dwells a bachelor, whose soul yearns for an affinity. Between yearnings he is occupied with the more prosaic task of cultivating strawberries for the Astoria market. His name of G. A.
