WANTED-BASTERN OREGON MEN.

Since there is no possibility of an Eastern Oregon man becoming a United States senator, at least for some time, the next best opening for an Eastern Oregon man is the office of governor, and some republican from Oregon a share of the emoluments:

A TINY MUNCHAUSEN.

Richard Murphy, a mite of a boy, 12 years old, landed in the Waldorfson City, Mo., and Samazed all who Leo's rectory has had the midget under his charge and made a careful study of him, and also called to his aid eminent alienists for examination, For them to sit still and do nothing who pronounced him not only a liar of diseased minds may think upon th subject, there is no doubt of the facthe great subjects of capital, the farmer and the capitalist, Wall street sharks The time to strike is when the iron World an interesting account of the from home,

I said to him: "I have been in proprietor of a paper. Will you kindly tell me what is the policy of paper, the extent of its circulation,

He answered: "Yes, It was started as a little school of attention and I immediately made arrangements to print the paper. I have four presses." He mentioned the name of the presses. I cannot now recall with correctness the name, and he added: "I have one large Hoe

After talking with the boy for sometime Father Ducey presented him to Mr. Keene, who invited him to take a seat beside him, where he was dining in the palm garden.

"My boy," said Father Ducey, this is Mr. James Keene." Richard turned to me and said with James R. Keene you notice he rup-plied the "R." which I omitted, the great Wall street broker?" I answered 'Yes." Mr. Keene said to him 'Yes." Mr. Keene said to him with a very paternal air, "My boy, Father Ducey tells me you are the proprietor I do not believe in free silver. I think Mr. Bryan is a sincere man and by many kings. We have oil steel kings, money kings, copper kings and sugar kings, and think all this is wrong."

"Why do you think trusts and monopolies are wrong? asked Mr. Keene Quietly gesticulating with his little hands, this mite of a twelve-year-old boy answered promptly, "I am op-posed to trusts and monopolies, Mr. Keene, for this reason: The concentra-tion of capital for the greater wealth of the few is an injury and an injustice to the smaller producers and plants. The trusts and monopolies seek the concentration of wealth to gather the smaller plants into their power, control them, and wipe the smaller producers out of existence, and when they have got possession of their plants they then dictate their measure, and say to their victim, 'You must do as we wish you to do; you must do business as we dictate. If you work you must work our way, and we shall dictate your compensation.' This is all wrong, Mr. Keene; it is a violation o the liberty and just rights given by God to man."

Then turning to Mr. Keene the boy finished his conversation in this way, n the capitalists of the east and the farmers of the west.

"Mr. Keene, the great difficulty with the people here in the East is they don't understand the farming classes of the West." Mr. Keene very kindly said, "Don't they, my boy"
'No, sir," said Richard; "I don't think they do. Why, Mr. Keene, I think Nebraska and Kansas are two of the greatest states in the union," "Why, my boy," Mr. Keene asked, "do you

"Well, Mr. Keene, first, because of the character of the men they produce: secondly, because of the richness of the venting the delivery of the goods soil and its products. I on't you think, Mr. Keene, that the farmer in Ne-braska and Kansas tilling the soil, Philadelphians will doubtless rise up wearing homespun and living an upright and honorable life before God, a man with true character, is a better person than the wealthy financier here in the East making money putting up railroad schemes, living sumptuously overy day, dressed in fine clothes and with no real character or honor before iod and man?"

Mr. Keene received this remark with very fine humor, and seeing the boy's demagogic notion about wealth in any torm, said to him: "My boy, you are mistaken. There are many farmers in the West just as tricky and more tricky than the persons you have in view, and there are plenty of men here engaged in finance in Wall street, men o the highest honor, whose word is as sacred as any written contract, and to carry out that word they will sacrifice all they possess, rob no one and take advantage of no one.

Then I informed the boy that h nust not arrive at these general and weeping condemnations and accusations against men of means; that what he said was not generally applicable. though applicable to some persons who are regarded as sharpers and whom men in the street avoid as unworthy trust and confidence.
