A CANDIDATE PROPOSED.

While a number of names are being mentioned in connection with the office of mayor of Pendleton, there is one that occurs to the East Oregonian as of g'eat fitness, if the gentleman in question could spare the time from his business to accept it. This name is that of Leon Cohen, a resident and it will cause an awakening in the business man of Pendleton for seventeen years, a public spirited, courageous and progressive citizen at all times and unscrupulously honest and capable. grown village, doing business like a Mr. Coben is a plain business man, without the deceptions and indirectness of the politician, and would make a fit successor to Dr. F. ## SEATTLE'S INVASION.

Let Portland take notice. Seattle proposes to invade the territory heretofore almost monopolized by Portland's wholesalers. Scattle's Chamber of Commerce has sent a committee to Walla Walla to look into trade conditions there, and this scouting expedition is followed by all sorts of nice articles in the Seattle newspapers. Seattle has gone out after the jobbing business of the Garden City, and will put into the war for trade all of the resources at her command.

In this war, Portland has immeasurably the advantage. She has every reason to hold the trade now controlled in that territory. But, she cannot hold it by sitting down there at the junction of the Columbia and Willamette rivers, and talking about water level grades and the mightiness of her commercial importance. In the lines of buman endeavor excepting prize fighting. perhaps, talking counts for little. Furthermore, Portland will have to revise her methods of doing business with interior retailers. With no disrespect to the excellent gentlemen who for so many years controlled the wolesale trade of the Oregon metropolis, some one made a pertinent remark one day when he said that

She and Mr. Alexander left in their private car but a tew days before the employes Mr. Morgan arrived from the east to arrange the place for the reception of the numerons guests whom their master is entertaining. Fifteen house servants were sent out by Mr. Morgan in advance. In addition to them he brought with him on his private train Louis Sherry, New York's lamous caterer, who conducts an eight-story rotisserie, the roof garden of which looks down upon Delmonico's uptown

The Crocker house was built for the comfort of its inmates above everything else. There is an air of homelike quiet about it which impresses from the time one first sets foot on the broad sidewalks where Mrs. Crocker used to make the children of neighbors welcome to coast on their wagons and glide on their skates.

The broad granite steps which lead from California street are of easy rise and end at a wide portico, the floor of which is richly mosaiced with colored Italian marbles.

Massive doors of polished oriental woods roll back into the walis, 'disclosing a balt of magnificent size, which is filled with jardiniers of flowering plants. On the right of this hall opens a drawing-room, extending along California street front, and on the left is the spacious art gallery, At the end of the hall, opposite the en-trance, is a broad flight of stairs al-Portland would forge ahead according to its advantages and possibilities most its full width, which by reason only after a lot of funerals had oc- of the height of the first and second stories of the house gives an effect of perspective to the vists which first The old time methods, obtaining presents itself to the visitor.
