GOVERNOR ODELL DID IT.

Governor Odell made it possible to elect the law fusion ticket in New York. It came in this manner, in the opinion of the East Oregonian:

In previous years, under an agreement well known to have been existing, Republican Tom Platt took the control of the New York state politics, and Democratic Dick Croker took the control of New York city politics, these two working together. At the last republican national convention Platt succeeded in nominating Roosevelt, thinking to abate the latter permanently. Platt then nominated Benjamin Odell for the New York governorship, and he was elected. Odell had for years been the visible head of the Platt machine as state chairman. Odell had managed the practical, executive end of the Platt-Croker empire in the state politics. He was a brilliant manipulator. He was the most adroit practical politician in the state.

It was the theory that Odell would continue to do Platt's will. But upon Odell taking the governor's chair at Albany, he at once gave it out that he himself was to be the governor. He would listen to Mr. Platt's advice, but also he would listen to any other citizen's advice. He was to be no longer any man's tool. Furthermore, he told them that he knew all the methods whereby men worked New York's legislature and pilfered the state treasury. He proposed to balk these games, and balk them he did. He is the greatest governor New York has ever had.

But Odell being independent, honest, faithful to the people of the state was calculated to shear Platt of his power. Platt was no longer of account in the state or city, hence he could not assist Croker even if he would, and it is to be doubted that he desired to do so, inasmuch as Platt was practically out of politics, after Odell deprived Platt of his former power.

Odell broke the Platt-Croker combine, or reduced it to a state so that it was ineffectual, and hence it is that Odell made it possible to elect the law fusion ticket.

GEER VERSUS HOAR.

Even to suggest a comparison between T. T. Geer and George F. Hoar of Massachusetts is to compliment Mr. Geer, although the comparison is unfavorable to the latter, yet it is quite pertinent to print these two items taken from exchanges:

An Ohio paper says: "Governor Geer of Oregon was the first speaker, and dwelt on the insincerity of the democrats."

Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, in addressing the republicans of that state, said: "You and I are republicans. You and I are men of the north. Most of us are Protestants in religion. We are men of native birth. Yet if every republican were today to fall in his place, as William McKinley has fallen, I believe our countrymen of the other party, in spite of what we deem their errors, would take the republic and bear on the flag of liberty and glory. I believe that if every Protestant were to be stricken down by a lightning stroke, that our brethren of the Catholic faith would still carry on the republic in a spirit of a true and loving freedom. I believe if every man of native birth within our borders were to die, the men of foreign birth, who have come here to seek homes and liberty under the shadow of the republic, would carry on the republic in God's appointed way. I believe if every man of the north were to die the new and chastened south with the virtues it has cherished from the beginning, of love of home and love of state, and love of freedom, with its courage and its constancy, would take the country and bear it on to the achievement of its lofty destiny. The anarchies must slay 75,000,000 Americans before we can slay the republic."

But any newspaper were Senator Hoar an apology for connecting his name with anyone so imprudently below him in intellect and so inexpressibly smaller in mind and so infinitely narrower in view as our own Governor Geer.

PENDLETON REVISITED.

A mortal wave struck the Better World, in the beginning of the 24th century, and some of the most violent agitators were banished. Two journalists who had advocated the "better" journal type, came back to earth. Calling by easy stages by the transatlantic air line to Mars, they found themselves broke in that strange land, and after many hardships prevailed upon the manager of the Santos-Dumont air ship to allow them to pass coal for the Bremen from Mars to Earth. Being strangers, their dignity was not injured by this change in occupation.

By a strange chance the first stop of the air ship made on earth, was at a spot familiar to one of these excellent agitators, who recognized the city of his birth, his long forgotten Pendleton, and although it bore none of its ancient aspect, he could locate its familiar place in interest. His companion had gone from Venus to the former World, and hence was a stranger to the history of earth. But with true journalistic instinct the Pendleton man proceeded to "show him around."

"I find that my neighbors have forsaken many of their ancient customs," said the journalist from Earth. "If the surrounding hills had not been stamped indelibly in my memory, I should have failed to recognize the home of my childhood," he continued.

Your memory is remarkable. You have profited by your profession in the Better World. Did the people of Earth possess memories reaching about four centuries in extent in your time?" asked the man from Venus.

"Well, men of my profession had a faculty which answered all common purposes. There was no limit to its extent. It was called imagination," the Earthly man replied.

All the streets appeared to be main streets. The first change which the Pendleton man noticed was the death-like stillness in the city. Although it was yet only two hours past midnight, and they had listened intently for ten minutes, they had not heard a shriek from a locomotive whistle. It fact, a splendid park extended along the side of the city, and the ancient railroad tracks. Noiseless carriages glided like spirits along the great boulevards.

"These are the statues of your heroes, are they?" queried the Venus man, as they strolled through the park, and the subject of street sprinkling, fire and musical and public fountains. Marble statues stood everywhere.

"Yes, these are the benefactors of their city," explained the Pendleton man. "This is a hero of the 20th century." He continued, laying his hand upon the shoulder of a colossal figure which stood at the crossing of the streets.

"Do he conquer some neighboring tribe as a gift to his king and his country," asked Mr. Venus.

"Oh no, quite otherwise," replied the Earthly man. "He was a hero of peace. He is the man who introduced the subject of street sprinkling to his people. You see our barbarian forefathers were slow to take up new ideas. They clung to their old ways, and until the use and beauty of a thing were thoroughly explained they were suspicious of it."

"And this statue here, here, with the massive brow and imperial chin. It must be a statue of a pagan god," mused the man from Venus.

"This," said the other, "is a man who in the interest of public health, filled up and thus did away with a well containing worms and germs from which a whole neighborhood of natives drew their drinking water for years."

"Let us dine," said the Pendleton man. "I am ferociously hungry." They drew near a pure fountain which bubbled over its brim. The Pendleton man took a glass vial from a recess in his robe, and swallowing a capsule of condensed food, washed it down with a draught of water and was satisfied. His companion did likewise. Then they directed their steps to the Museum of Antiquities, a spacious hall lined from floor to ceiling with ancient relics of earth.

"I had almost forgotten this ancient and universal implement of death," said the Pendleton man, waving his hand gently upon an old cook stove.

"My forefathers compelled their women to bend over these old furnaces for at least one-fourth of their lives in cooking and preparing food for their lords. Life was shortened, temperaments were embittered and health was wrecked in the past, by the demerons of earth taking food into their stomachs sizzling and steaming. Splantrous pots, pans and vessels of various description, were placed upon these heated furnaces, and food of every kind was boiled in them, stirred with great iron spoons and dished up on great tables at which the old barbarians seated themselves," explained the son of earth.

"All very strange," said the other.

"Did your ancestors minister to the physical wants alone," he continued. "Did they take no spiritual food?"

"Oh, very, very much; the ancient week contained seven days of twenty-four hours each, and for one hour each week out of the 168 hours comprising the week, these devout men and women took a very shower bath, as it were, of spiritual drink. Their ministers gave them lectures on the beauty of doing right and the horror of doing wrong, and proudly replied to the banished journalists.

"Did they not know enough to do right without being told?" asked the astonished correspondent from Venus.

"Oh, you know men often needed a little persuasion and moral stimulus in many of the plain duties of life here, before," as now," explained the Pendleton boy.

The two companions separated and went different ways through the city. The Pendleton journalist was surprised to find the baseball park a total wreck. There was a fence around it and it was exhibited to strangers as a sad relic of the ferocity of the sports of the past. The gentle populace spoke of it, as if they were standing at the door of a dungeon from which the lions sprang upon the Christians in the Roman forum.

Lonely and friendless, the medical went into an office down town and wrote to the head officials of the air line for a pass out of the city. Its chances were unbearable. His exile would not have been so poignant had he been sent to Hades.

Seek Relief!

The great proportion of women who suffer never make a serious effort to benefit themselves. The most of them go on paying no attention to their little menstrual disorders, believing they will eventually wear off. At the period of menstruation a woman is peculiarly susceptible to cold and other external influences and it is also the most favorable time for the development of hidden disease germs which may be lurking in the system. Any physician knows that disordered menstruation, falling of the womb and leucorrhoea are blighting lives in almost every home. No woman should neglect herself a moment after she sees indications of female disease. Almost instant relief can be secured by the use of

WINE OF CARDUI

It will relieve you right in your own home. Will you accept the testimony of Mrs. Beigler and thousands of other women and really seek relief today? All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui.

100 Chicago Street, Fort Wayne, Ind., March 7, 1900.

Your Wine of Cardui has done a world of good for me. I have used five bottles of the Wine and one package of Cardui's Blood-Drawer. And since I have started to use it I will not be without it in the house. It helped my sister in Toledo, who did not menstruate as she ought. She was sixteen years of age and nothing else helped her. I was in a very sad state myself before I used your medicine, but I found relief in three days. And now I feel like a new woman and do all my housework and washing, which I could not do before. I took Wine of Cardui. I would be very glad to write any poor woman and tell her how I suffered before I used Wine of Cardui.
