The Dalles, Or., Dec. 7.—Maurice Cavanaugh, engineer, is dead, Frank Clark, fireman, is injured, and the O. R. & N. company has suffered con-siderable loss, from what now appears to have been a dastardly attempt to wreck the passenger train, eastbound, at a point ten miles east of The Dalles on Friday afternoon.

What He Said.

"While the Covello extension was a surprise to us here, I have not the least doubt that it was all understood in New York a month ago. There is little doubt that the Northern Pacific has secured concessions in some other quarter which will counterbalance those of the O. R. & N. company here. If that is true, as I have no doubt it is, then the people of Walla Walla valley may never know where the track goes which balances the books in regard to the Covello branch. Again, the Northern Pacific may build east from Riverside, where it owns a right of way. It is all in the future, and no railroad man in this section of the country knows what is coming. New York does not give out its plans before they are ripe."
