JACKASS FOR A PET.

A Newspaper Man Trained Him to Perform Several Tricks.

Dad Easterbrook, editor of the Vale Gazette, has a curious pet in the shape of a meek-eyed looking jackass. Dad has put in his spare time training the animal to do various tricks, says the Baker City Herald. Last week, however, the donkey fell from grace. It went into the print shop, pied a lot of type, and, Easterbrook says, ate up his vest with a $5 bill inside. That was only the beginning. The donkey discovered two new dressmakers had come to town and hung their washing on the line. The donkey at once started out to finish his meal and devoured three night shirts, one wrapper, two pair of hose and also cavorted all over three pair of unmentionables. The ladies waited on the editor and demanded the expulsion of the donkey. Dad at once sent a boy off with the animal to a secluded pasture. The boy, however, in a mixup with the hungry descendent of Baalam's side kicker, got his arm broken. Easterbrook declares the reason for the donkey kicking the boy was that the former has a peculiar antipathy for kids. At any rate, Dad's pet not only ate up his vest, with that $5 bill, but also ran up a bill for those ladies' wearing apparel that will take his summer's wages to square.

The Poorest Child.

(From "Kids of Many Colors.")

Old Kris Kringle, in his shop,
Worked all day and could not stop.
"Christmas is so near," he said,
"Ev'ry doll must have he head;
Ev'ry sled a painted coat;
Every flock a fleecy goat;
Ev'ry play house walls and roofs;
Ev'ry hobby horse its hoofs;
Children grow too good, tis clear
When it comes this time of year."

Old Frau Kringle dragged across
Bags of mail marked "Santa Claus."
"All those children over seas,"
Said she, "Call you what they please."
But she said it with a smile.
Dressing dollies all the while.
And he read the letters out
Frowning at one as in doubt.
"Dear me," said he, "What is this?
One child only wants a kiss!"

"Listen to her wish, my dear."
(On his cheek there shown a tear)
"Dear Old Santa, give my toys
To your other girls and boys,
But on Christmas eve so bright,
Please, oh please, kiss me good night.
For since mamma went above
I have everything but love."
Old Kris Kringle shook his head.
"That's our poorest child," he said.

The Rose of Sharon.

I am the Rose of Sharon. It was I
Who caught the reddest sunbeams of the sky
And gathered in the fragrance of the air
And held it high within my chalice fair.

Once by the shining sea of Galilee,
A virgin saw me and fearlessly
She plucked from my bristling stem and bore
Me cruel thorns and all away with her.

Twas I who saw the light in Bethlehem's star
I saw the wise men gathered from afar.
I heard the angel's voices from heaven when
It sang of peace on earth, good will to men.

I am the Rose of Sharon. Once I
Along a lonely path on which I knew
His blessed feet would tread. And standing there
He would behold a rose waiting and fair!
The Master came that way. I stretched my stem
Until it reached and touched his garment's hem
And in that touch a whispered message grew—
A message from the Father unto you!

"Stay, fair sweet rose," the garments seemed to say—
"Rose, with the wisdom of all yesterday—
"Stay thou, and with thy petals unfurled,
Be thou a Christmas gift to all the world!"
