NICARAGUAN BILL UP FOR CONSIDERATION.

House Went into Committee of the Whole on the Measure of the Representative From Iowa.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The house passed the Nicaraguan canal bill at a late hour. The ballot was: 308 ayes, 2 noes. Fletcher, of Minnesota, and Lassiter, of Virginia, were the noes.

Washington, Jan. 9.—Immediately after the opening of the house today the body went into committee of the whole for consideration of the Hepburn Nicaraguan canal bill. The first two speakers favored passage of the bill as presented.

During the debate there was a warm interchange between Cannon and Hepburn, who are ancient enemies. Hepburn intimated that Cannon seldom is right, to which Cannon replied that Hepburn would be a better legislator if he were as good in giving information as in the flip of the tongue.

Cannon begged the house to go slow before pledging the country to an expenditure that may develop into untold millions. He said when the proper time came he would offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to bring it back with a provision inserted for the location of the canal on the route that should be found to be best.

Hepburn closed the general debate with a speech advocating the passage of the bill as drawn by the committee.

It seems that the little fellow was placed in his high chair near the stove while his mother busied herself with her household duties. Having to go upon an errand to a neighbor's house, and not suspecting that her absence from the room for a few moments would make any difference, the mother left the little fellow to his own devices. During her absence the baby in some manner tipped himself and his chair over, falling between the wall and the stove, and directly against the latter. The mother returned a few moments later, but not until her child had received burns which caused his death a day or two later.
