What appears to be a black eye for the Panama Canal and clearly helps the Nicaragua Canal is a statement by persons representing the United States stockholders of the Panama Railroad Company that they would not sell their interest in the railroad to the United States.

Chairman Burton, of the rivers and harbors committee, stated that the river and harbor bill that is now being framed must not be larger than the bill reported by his committee at the last session. This is taken to mean that the mouth of the Columbia will receive $600,000 appropriation.

Friends of the Nicaragua Canal say that the developments now show that the Panama Canal Company has nothing but a part of the ditch to unload on the United States government, and the most valuable assets, the cession from the Colombian government and the full control of the Panama railroad, are not within the power of the Panama company to transfer, should the government buy its property.

loose and baggy to be graceful in effect.

A feature of decoration which has gained favor rather than lost in popularity is tucking. A delightful effect is produced in a waist composed of daintily hemstitched solid tucking running up and down, with the sleeves and narrow cuffs made of crosswise tucks to correspond. Elbow sleeves are seen on some of the more delicate designs and will be worn to a certain extent during the mid-summer season. Finished with a band and bow of black velvet they give a decidedly "Frenchy" effect to a waist for afternoon or evening wear. Hats are declared so late and are subject to such sudden changes that the positive announcement of any permanent styles seems almost a presumption. Present indications, however, suggest green as the popular shade for the new spring hat. All during the winter season the milliners have been partial to this tint and unless one were in mourning, the hat maker has always managed in some way to introduce a bit of color somewhere in the headgear, if only a bunch of silk or velvet leaves.

As a fashionable spring color green will combine chiefly with white, black, grey or brown. A pretty model showing this idea effectively is a broad brimmed hat of white satin chip worn off the face. The brim is caught back to the crown in front by a twisted band of bright ivy green ribbon. One end of this ribbon encircles the crown and to it is attached a bunch of pale green foliage so as to rest on the brim in front and opposite to it behind a bunch of green and white variegated foliage with little round berries bearing a resemblance to currants. Underneath the brim in front the ribbon is drawn up into a large pouf, which is placed on a folded band of the same. Another smart hat is composed of two draped plaques of coral pink fancy braid, with folds of pink chiffon between them. The trimming embodies a delightful arrangement of cream lace draped around the brim while resting upon the hair under the brim are delicate green and white leaves.

Maline, one of the new spider-web substances, plays an important part in the creation of spring headgear. A large hat destined to shade the face of some pretty summer girl is made of this material and has a crown banded with pale blue panne velvet. Around the edge of the brim white roses form a wreath and the garland around the brim is of pale green terminating with a black rosette. So far all the hats for spring are large in shape and inclined to be worn off the face. Untrammelled shapes made of fine Leghorn and other pliable straw are Gainsborough in effect, and will be trimmed, as are nearly all hats of this style, with sweeping ostrich plumes and tins. The appearance of the shirt waist necessarily brings out many novelties in stocks and belts and those are shown in unlimited variety. Patent leather belts will be fashionable again, also those of fine leather finish with plain heavy silver buckles that were known last summer as the "dog collar" belts. Still other designs come in beaded effect, the beads being strung upon an elastic foundation, but as the majority of these belts are wide they are not destined to become a fad, for the season of 1902, at least. Some of the newest belts have a little device attached to the inside by which the silver chataleine can be made more secure, and the idea is a very clever one, because such extravagant sums are spent upon these little adornments that the loss of one really means the expenditure of a good round sum, if the loser wishes to replace the serviceable little article.

NEW YORK FASHIONS

SHOW WINTER GONE

Gorgeous Array of Goods in all the Stores of Gotham.

New York, Jan. 18.—Spring, as far as fashions are concerned, is here, and in the shops there is no more sign of winter than if the thermometer registered a hundred and six in the shade rather than six above zero as it is wont to do at this season. Spread upon the counters in gorgeous array are dainty shirt waists of mull, linen, batiste, in fact of everything from silk to cotton, and the milliner shops are just as resplendent with their display of newly imported headgear. Shirt waist styles are prettier and more varied than ever, affording an almost unlimited choice of material and garniture in general effect they bear a remarkable resemblance to the designs of last year, but there are many little finishing touches which testify to the effort that manufacturer as well as modiste has exerted to introduce to whimsical Dame Fashion something original and at the same time worthy of popular favor.

The sheer lawns and mulls are delicately embroidered and bid fair to play an important part in the summer dress parade, substantiated by an elegant dress skirt of silk or satin-finished cloth. Madras, Oxford, cheviot and pique are the popular mediums, with heavy weight cotton goods for the smart tailor made waists. For plain as well as fancy models, the elongated front will be popular and some of the close fitting shirtwaists displayed in heavier materials have a yoke in the back. A very stylish design is shown in pique, combining white and pale blue—which may be substituted for pink or pale green—in its color scheme. It is made with large box plaits, which are of the colored goods, applied to the white foundation. In front the plaits extend from a yoke with a deep point on either side of the center plait. The points button down on the side plaits, one of which contains a tiny pocket, machine stitched to the plait. The back is finished with box plaits, corresponding in size to those in front. The cuffs are soft and are fastened with pearl buttons.

It may be mentioned that one of the distinguishing features of the latest model is the soft cuff. It is worn with waists of all materials and designs and made of the shiest linen hand embroidered, or, for the luxuriously inclined, they come in silk tissue, exquisitely hand painted. On some of the smartest waists they are fastened with two or three gold-sized pearl buttons. The buttons may be plain or elaborately carved, but always to meet the requirements of the faultless gown, they must be of pearl. While there are many delightful associations of tints in the new spring shirt waists, plain one-color effects are much seen. Nothing is cooler or daintier than white, so the announcement of its being employed for the majority of fashionable waists will be received joyfully by most women. Then it boasts an advantage unknown to the tinted fabrics, that of being laundered time without number without impairment to its color scheme.

A striking feature of the shirt waist for smart wear is the fine hand work with which they are finished. Delicate hand embroidery is seen in colors and in white, while both the plain and Mexican hemstitching embellishes other chic affairs. French dots will, of course, always be fashionable, because the air of daintiness which they add is distinctly their own. Another trimming frequently observed is fine beading which outlines the shoulder and arm seams of some of the most stylish models. The waist that buttons in the back will probably not play such an important part among the ultra-fashionable designs as it did last year, they are intended to attract and as a result, unless specially made are either taut and disfiguring or too
