NEW YORK MODES

GOTHAM WILL HAVE A RATHER GAY LENT

Coming of Prince Henry Sets the People Agog and Society Awaits Him. New York, Feb. 10.—Lent, which is considered the quietest period of the year in New York society, promises to be very gay this winter owing to the approaching visit of Prince Henry of Prussia. The little charity associations, sewing classes and visits to the poor which characterize the penitential season as far as fashionable Gothamites are concerned, will be carried on the same as ever, but they will be conspicuous for the absence of those women whose presence has made them distinctive after Washington's birthday, for then the prince arrives and society will outdo itself in entertaining the royal visitor.

In spite of the fact that Prince Henry's star will be an unusually itinerant one, he will come in contact with many of the most representative women in the country at the various receptions that will be given in his honor, and this fact is of more than usual importance to New Yorkers, for aside from the social eclat of the affair eighty per cent of the gowns which His Highness will have the pleasure of admiring, it is safe to say, are being constructed in the metropolis.

Some of the daintiest conceits are of embroidered crepe de chine. White is the favorite color, with the embroidery also in white, and the crepe de chine is so soft and graceful in itself that it is especially suited to the present fashion of close fitting skirts and artistic lines.

It still seems a bit incongruous, if that term may be substituted for the more literal word extravagant—although we are rapidly becoming educated up to the idea that no material is too handsome to be worn commonly—to see a woman in a superbly embroidered white crepe de chine in the daytime, the gown itself fashioned in ample design and the material rich enough for ball gown, but it is the fad of the moment, and so is adopted as being quite correct.

Something Delightfully Chic.

Something delightfully chic is an embroidered crepe gown of ivory white made with princess skirt, pointed bodice and attached flounce. A lace waist is to be worn under the bolero jacket, and the only trimming is a bias band of satin finishing the jacket. Exceedingly simple and dainty and remarkably costly is this costume, but it is one of the favorite models of the season.

Next to white, crepe de chine is seen most in the various new shades of red. This color is especially popular this season for dinner gowns and formal occasions. They are smartened here and there with a touch of black velvet kept in place by small buckles; sometimes the skirts are covered with graduated tuckings from the hem to the waist, becoming narrower as they ascend. This gives a very symmetrical effect to the figure. Nearly all of the bodices of these gowns are a little bloused, and not a few have deep collars of rich lace turning down from the neck.

Elbow sleeves are de rigueur, and the ruffles are widened at the elbows, becoming narrower inside the arms. There is really nothing more becoming to the arm than the emerging from frills as from the petals of a flower.

Flounces remain a favorite feature of dress trimming but their forms are various. Most of them are after the godet order, shaped, but where lace is employed they are put on often quite straight around the hem, in no way festooned but slightly full. In spite of all the extravagance and utter disregard for economy which is prevalent this year, smartly gowned women cannot become reconciled to the idea of slashing up their elegant old laces to secure fashionable effects in the trimmings of skirts so they prefer to let them hang perfectly plain so that when the gown is discarded the lace can be used again—and too, when such vast sums are paid for trimmings, why not let them be seen, if the display can be effected without any apparent desire on the part of the wearer to make it?

ALBERT T. PATRICK AND HIS LAWYERS AT HIS TRIAL FOR MURDER IN NEW YORK CITY

Some Advance Spring Modes.

Where materials are turned into flounces they are so cut that they widen out at the hem and become narrower above. There are indications of paniers among the advance spring modes and in some of the evening gowns displayed in the shops the trains come from the waist, except lines, chiffons, crepe de chines and a is brought up to the top of the bodice just like a Watteau while the sides are overdraped with deep falling lace. These effects, however, are only permissible in thin materials, but without the fashionable fabrics of the coming season will be silk mouselines, chiffons, crepe de chines and a long range of silk crepons—those exquisite materials too substantial for silk, too thick for chiffon, yet too thin to be classed with the regulation street dress goods. They have not come under the influence of the fanciful fashion christener, as yet so are nameless, crepons serving merely for present distinction.

A very pretty extravagance is the scented dinner gown, or street gown either, for that matter. The lad costs money, but what is it that does not? And there is no more attractive feature about a woman's gown. Sachet powder is used in little bags which are dispersed in convenient places upon the gown. The newest Parisian wrinkle is to stuff the hollow, just at the front of the shoulders, with bag in which there is a great deal of violet sachet. The French make tails as much a feature of the gown as the linings, and the manner in which the up-to-date gowns are scented would make more than a fashion volume. It is not the correct thing to use always the same perfume—one gets tired of it, but a variety is liked—one day a violet odor, next day cut rose, next day something else, and so on through the list of sweet smells. Many of the fashionable modistes leave a little slit in the lining, neatly bound with silk facing through which the various bags may be slipped.

Various Concretes.

The attention to details is one of the noticeable features of the best of frocks, for the beadings of lace, the runnings of velvet and the tiny gaugings of chiffon frillings all show an
