CANADIAN PARLIAMENT IN NINTH SESSION.

Bill to Create Divorce Court in Dominion of Canada.

Ottawa, Feb. 13.—The second session of the ninth Canadian parliament opened today with the usual ceremonies. The session is not expected to be a long one, though a number of important matters are on the agenda.

The government is in splendid condition to carry through all its measures. It has a majority in the house of commons of 55, and it practically controls the senate. It need not, therefore, be afraid to bring forward any measure, as, with both houses under its control, it can regard with indifference the full opposition of its political opponents, both in the house of commons and senate and outside.

It is probable that one of the first things to be considered will be a bill to create divorce courts in Canada. At the last session a bill was introduced in that direction which was opposed by Sir Wilfred Laurier and the majority of his colleagues and received such general opposition that the proposer finally withdrew it. Recently, however, Chief Justice Meredith refused to allow a couple who had married in Canada and afterward went to the United States and were divorced, and after marrying others returned to Canada to live, to be prosecuted on a charge of bigamy, claiming that the "injustice of Canadian divorce laws prevented the poor man from having the privilege that the rich man had." This decision of the chief justice of Ontario has created a stir in all circles in Canada, and many have pronounced themselves in favor of the re-introduction of the divorce bill in parliament.

Another bill to be introduced at the present session of parliament is one calling for the removal of certain judges from the bench who, through old age, deafness and other infirmities make it impossible, it is claimed, for them to discharge the duties for which they were appointed. Members of the legal profession on both sides of politics have represented to the government that this condition of affairs should cease, and it is probable that the matter will be fought out at the present session.
