COMEDY DRAMA

With Excellent Mechanical Effects, by L. J. Carter.

"The Eleventh Hour" will be presented at the Frazer tomorrow night. This is Lincoln J. Carter's play that he produced in Chicago on the 20th of May, 1900, where it met with pronounced success. The play is a comedy drama, but unlike most of Mr. Carter's plays, it does not depend upon a mechanical effect for its success. It has a story that is thoroughly interesting, abounding with pathos and comedy and the cast is said to be far above the average and includes the eminent German dialect comedian and singer, Charles A. (Karl) Gardner.

Everything that is used in this production is carried by the company. The last act is said to be the most costly stage setting that has ever been carried by a traveling organization.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin."

The street parade, with its kaleidoscopic colorings of silk and satin, waving plumes, dancing, prancing ponies, golden tableaux cars, three great brass bands, allegorical floats and processioned novelties is said to be one-half mile in length, and well worth miles of travel to behold, as shown by the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company to be here on February 25.

Throughout the world blind men outnumber blind women one to two.
