WOMAN'S WORLD

WHAT DAME FASH-

ION IS DOING

The Year 1902 Promises to be an Eventful one for the Arbiters of Styles; New and Original Novelties.

New York, March 16.—This promises to be an eventful year for the arbiters of fashion, for in the demand for something new and original so many novelties have been put upon the market that, speaking in the terms of business managers, they are drugs. Yet it must be acknowledged that the majority of these novelties are fetching and just sufficiently unique to appeal to the feminine heart.

There never was a year when there was such a rage for naming new fads after the popular plays of the season. For instance, there is displayed in one of Gotham's most exclusive shops a dainty arrangement for the coiffure styled the "Du Barry Hair Ornament." It consists of a fluffy rosette of chiffon which is placed at the back of the right ear at one end of a band of the same material laid over a strip of taffeta. This band is then carried over the crown of the head and fastened behind the left ear when it is finished with another rosette to correspond with the opposite side. The effect is very charming and with the low style of headdress which prevails no prettier arrangement for the coiffure could be desired.

Another fashion with a theatrical name is the Toreador collarette. This consists of a tiny turnover to be worn with the stock. It comes in linen and various shades and rather heavy in appearance though light in weight. The surface of the linen is finished in rather dull effect and when the collarette is embroidered with silk of a contrasting color, the pattern is brought out quite nicely. The patterns most used are French polka dots, small traceries of running vines and tiny groups of small flowers. To accommodate the vogue for appliques many of the little Toreador collarettes have applied bands of insertion, very narrow and equally elegant in quality and these are stitched on with colored silks. Cuffs and belts come to match the collettes, and now that Easter preparations are in order, it would not be a bad idea for the woman who is skillful with her needle to utilize the idea in making gifts for Eastertide.

Then there is the Florodora ruff, a chic and artistic creation to be worn about the neck. The strictly "Florodora" ruff is carried out in black silk crepon of finest quality and lightest weight, but there are many pretty conceits in other colors, and also a few combinations. The ruff is composed of several double frills of crepon stitched upon a band of taffeta, having their greatest width in the back. At the front and sides there is a graduated effect which narrows regularly until the front ends are no wider than the long streamers of accordion plated chignon into which they emerge.

The fancy bodices for spring are out in full glory and the feminine heart turns to them as does the young man's thoughts to love, to us a poetic comparison, but not so lightly, for the bodices make the double impression of beauty and cost. They are not as radical in the disclosures of newness as are the skirts, but many of the old ideas are carried out so artistically that one is satisfied to have the innovations of treatment transferred to skirts.

The bodices, however, have one feature which outweighs the advantage of all other designs and that is their unlimited variety. All manner of silks, soft satins and sheer materials appear in them, and lace is a noticeably plentiful trimming, supplemented with the inevitable bands of black velvet.

The coming spring and summer promise to prove more of white seasons than did last spring and summer. Eight-tenths of the bodices displayed upon the counters are developed in white fabrics, and these are seconded in popularity by the designs figured with stripes, polka dots or checks. New silk and cotton grenadines come in handsome still colors, in stripes and checks and made up handsomely in bodices when trimmed with lace. Yokes and berthas are also to be worn with such waists. Tucking, shirring and smocking will be a popular resort in decorating dress bodices, and, of course, there is the usual run of applications and inset pieces of lace.

While a number of bodices fasten in the back, those buttoning down the front or at the side will be more in favor. The closed straight front is rather too expensive to meet general requirements and as slender effects are the ones most sought, designs carrying out this idea will be the most affected.

Time was when a gown that cost three hundred dollars or so was considered steep, even for the woman with a generous dress allowance.

nowadays a frock secured at this figure is gobbled up in a jiffy and considered a bargain, if it contains the features of the newest modes.

Eight hundred or a thousand does not really evoke a protest and a modiste has to figure around the twelve hundred dollar mark to make the ultra-fashionably dressed woman open her eyes or draw her breath.

Some of the modistes are making desperate efforts to supercede inserted lace with shimmering paillettes and beads. A bewitching frock of cornflower blue chiffon is covered with spangles and trimmed around the skirt with a flounce of deep lace embroidered in mock jewels—real ones are used if one can afford it. The flounce is kept in place by an embroidery of knots of the liver order and the fullness at the hips is gathered in tiny tucks.

There is a yoke of elegant lace that trims the skirt and elbow sleeves at the same, finished at the elbow with a flower frill of plated chiffon.

Although it is getting late for wraps, some very lovely designs are seen and many are now under construction. A handsome model is made of white taffeta and intended for evening wear. The edges of the front and lower edges are trimmed with a deep band of Irish point lace and the sleeves are overlaid with the same trimming. There is a lining of white satin and the lapels turn back in splendid contrast with the lace and silk. In addition to the richness of the cloak material, the wrap curves into graceful outlines and lends a dignity to the bearing, that might be well envied by a queen.

These cloaks will be worn throughout the summer at the various resorts over thin unlined gowns and though in their original form they cost a small fortune, they can be duplicated without losing any of their beautiful effect at a surprisingly small cost.

It has been a benefit to all my family." Tallman & Co. and Brock & McComas.

Among interesting topics is the attitude of England and other powers toward the United States during the Spanish war. We know what any of them would have done had they only dared.

The homliest man in Pendleton as well as the handsomest, and others are invited to call on any druggist and get free a trial bottle of Kemp's Balsam for the throat and lungs, a remedy that is guaranteed to cure and relieve all chronic and acute coughs, asthma, bronchitis and consumption.
