TODD WAS DROWNED

The body of Eliza Todd was found this afternoon in the Byers mill race.

While the body of young Todd was being searched for this afternoon a crowd of several hundred people watched the work of the searchers. The situation was strained, and quite naturally the mother and sisters followed along as the boat went down the stream with intense anxiety over every movement.

The boat was placed in the race at the head, and when the water was sufficiently low, was let slowly down towards the lower end. The people followed along, and manifested sympathy with the members of the family, as momentary incidents seemed to show evidence of the finding of the body. On downward went the searching party, slowly and carefully hunting the bottom for the young man, until the tail of the race had been reached.

Most of the people then went away, thinking that it had been demonstrated that the body was not in the race. But the search was resumed.

Charles Hilliard found the body at Franklin street. An inquest will be held at 5 o'clock.

The body was lying on its back with the head down stream and apparently Todd had been walking across the bridge and accidentally fallen in. Whether or not this is so will probably never be known, as it has been said by some of his intimate friends that he had threatened to kill himself, although his family deny this story. Todd was under the influence of liquor when last seen by Ernest Green, and this lends theory to the supposition of accidental death. There was no mark of foul play on the body.

The finding of a new felt hat on Sunday afternoon, and its identification as belonging to Todd, and the discovery today by the young man's family that the hat had previously been found, caused the turning off of the water of the Byers mill race in order that the body might be searched for. The water was turned off about noon and it was some time before he bottom could be seen.

The hat was found on Sunday by J. F. Bentley and Arthur Lang, who discovered it against the grating in the end of the race, below Joe Dupuis' house. They threw it onto the bank, and taken to the parents' and proven to be that of young Todd.

STEAMER FROM LEWISTON.

People to Put a Line on Snake River.

Starbuck, March 19.—Word comes down the river from Lewiston and other points of a new steamer line to be placed in service along the upper Snake river between Huntington, Caldwell and similar points. This service, which will be small steamers plying every other day, was originated recently by farmers and business men who have a great deal of freight to move and who cannot wait for land travel. Wool, hides and vast quantities of wood are to be taken up through this means of transportation. It is believed that the early watermelon trade from the sheltered coves of the upper river will also be of immense benefit to producers.

The entire cost of the steamer line is not to be excessive, as the vessels must be small enough to be removed entirely from the water during winter weather, as it would be next to impossible to save them from being ground to pieces by floating ice in the event they were left within reach of the vast gorges which form when the ice goes out in the spring. Then, too, the channels on the upper river are not always of the best and there are at times such shallow places to be passed that the lightest draught vessels are a necessity.

There will be no attempt made to bring these little vessels into the lower river as the rapids and dangerous shoals are too numerous and difficult of passage. It is to be strictly an interior line, but one which will be of great benefit to those in its immediate neighborhood.

From Medicine to the Drama.

The earlier part of Victorien Sardou's career was beset with many trials and difficulties. His parents wished him to take up a medical career, and he began his studies with some zeal. The love of the drama, however, was far greater than the love of the pill box, and in the interval of the other work Sardou was busy upon a play. Life was a struggle for him, for he had little money, though he managed to get journalistic work to supplement his more slender income. His first play was a failure, and Sardou rushed from the theater vowing never to enter one again. He fell seriously ill, was nursed back to health by Mile. de Breccourt, an actress who lived on a floor below, and from that time his fortune was made.

Janet's Way of Growing Young.

As a matter of fact Janet was born exactly two years before her brother Fred; therefore in the natural course of things when he was ten she was twelve and gloried in it. When Fred was known to be fourteen, she still confessed to sixteen. When Fred boasted eighteen years, she timidly acknowledged herself just over nineteen. When Fred came home from college and had a party in honor of his twenty-first birthday, Janet said to her friends: "What a boyish fellow Fred is! Who would think he is only a year younger than I?" When Fred declared himself twenty-five and old enough to get married, Janet said to a gentleman friend: "Do you know, I feel very jealous of Fred getting married. But, then, I suppose twins always are more attached to one another." And two years later at Fred's wedding she said with a girlish simper to the guests: "Dear old Fred! To see him married today, and to think when he was only five years old they brought him to see me, his baby sister! I wonder if he thinks of it now?"

The Old Constitution.

The Constitution originally carried forty-four guns. A particularly interesting history is connected with this ship. During the war with the Barbary powers in 1803 she was Commodore Preble's flagship in the Mediterranean and played a conspicuous part during the whole war. Lieutenant Wadsworth, who was blown up before Tripoli in the ill fated Intrepid, was one of the officers of the Constitution. In the course of the war with England in 1812 the English papers laughed at the Constitution and spoke of her as "a bundle of pine boards sailing under a bit of striped bunting." But when under Captain Hull she captured the English frigate the Guerriere, a vessel of nearly equal force, the people who had before ridiculed her called her "one of the staunchest vessels afloat." A few months after this victory the Constitution, then commanded by Captain Bainbridge, compelled one of the finest frigates in the British navy, the Java, to strike its colors.

Prince of Wales Officiates.

London, March 19.—In the presence of a large and representative gathering of scientific men the Prince of Wales today performed the ceremony of opening the doors of the National Physical Laboratory, at Bushby House, Hampton Court. In an able and interesting address his Highness spoke of the high standing of the institution and of the world-wide importance of its scientific research.

The National Physical Laboratory, vested in the control of the Royal Society, and of which Lord Rayleigh is chairman, was established for the purpose of standardizing and verifying scientific instruments, for testing materials and for carrying out chemical and physical investigations of practical value, the scheme of work in great measure being based upon that adopted by the famous Physikalisch-Technische Reichsanstalt, at Charlottenburg.
