THE GOAL IS IN SIGHT.

Republicans of eastern Oregon are beginning to give evidence of their intention to demand in no uncertain voice the nomination of an eastern Oregon man for governor, and to oppose with all the vigor that is in them the re-nomination of T. T. Geer for that office. The strongest eastern Oregon candidate before the convention is the man to nominate. The field has been open to each on equal terms. The strongest man is the one entitled to the prize.

There is a tendency on the part of some eastern Oregon republicans to aid Geer against an eastern Oregon man—to attempt to prove traitor to this section in behalf of the candidate of Marion county, about the only county that has shown any preference for him at the primaries. This work should not be encouraged and those guilty of it should be remembered by the people at the polls on all future occasions. They should be given to understand that eastern Oregon's interest should be considered first and their personal interest second in political matters.

Eastern Oregon needs representation in state government at Salem, and once in a life time should be allowed at least to name the candidate for governor. The people of the rest of Oregon are generous enough to admit the justice of this claim, but the politicians are inclined to deny it. Eastern Oregon republicans should not neglect their opportunity to secure the nomination for an eastern Oregon man. Good work has been done and it should continue to the end. Every republican will have to be on his guard to prevent the nomination of some other than an eastern Oregon man.

Let it be said to Portland that eastern Oregon is out for the nomination and that it is to her interest to give heed to the claim. If in her right senses, she will be quick to admit its justice and render substantial aid to the cause. Portland will not be found wanting, if the claim of eastern Oregon is strongly presented. The people in this section are no small contributors to Portland's prosperity and it is well for the people of Oregon's metropolis to have their attention called to a duty which they owe this section of the state.

Now to work, all hands at their posts, and the republican party, in convention assembled, will at Portland, next week, nominate an Eastern Oregon man for governor.

No citizen of eastern Oregon should throw cold water on this undertaking. It is worthy of the support of eastern Oregon people. It is simply the presentation of a claim for recognition which will advance the interests of the great inland Empire, whose greater development is the most important thing in the lives of all the people who make their homes in this section.

We must assert our claims to obtain our rights. If we are backward in it, our influence will be proportionately less and less.

The goal is in sight; work the harder.

MITCHELL'S STANDING.

Oregonians may not have given special thought to the fact, with other political matters to distract at-attention, but it is true that Senator John H. Mitchell, junior senator from this state, is just now one of the commanding figures in the national upper house. He has virtually displaced Senator Morgan, of Alabama, in the command of the canal forces of the senate, and is the recognized leader in the fight for the exclusion of the Chinese, two vitally important measures now attracting attention in the halls of national legislation.

These two positions are his because he is acknowledged to be a man of mental attainments and of valuable experience, and it is no small compliment to Oregon to have one of its senators thus honored in Washington.

Oregon needs another man of ability to stand beside Senator Mitchell and attend to the affairs of the country with the distinguished ability manifested by Mr. Mitchell. It will be unfortunate if a mistake be made by the coming legislature, and, judging from past results accomplished by that body, a mistake may be made with no surprise to the people of the state.

Is there a man in Oregon who will deny that with H. W. Scott in the senate, the senatorial team will be the equal to that sent from any other state in the Union? Oregon has an opportunity. Will she embrace it?

DEWEY, SCHLEY, MILES.

Dewey and Schley, the two most prominent figures in the United States navy, and Miles, the most conspicuous in the army, are all in antagonism to the powers that be at Washington. Are all of them wrong? Is it possible that these gallant defenders of the flag are right and that those who represent the control at the national capital are justly subject to criticism? Is the fact that these three are apparently discredited—all being democrats—due to the desire on the part of leading republicans to kill them off politically? And is it merely coincidence that these three most prominent military men in the United States are opposed by the Roosevelt administration, as they were opposed under the McKinley administration? And, again, is it not strange that these men—celebrated professors of the art of warfare with distinguished records equal to that of any American soldier now living—were apparently trusted less by the war and navy departments than are some of the boys like Funsion who came over the heads of men whose whole lives have been devoted to the study and practice of military science?

STRENGTH OF THE WEST.

Secretary Shaw in a recent address spoke of a west that found no place in even the imagination of the founders of the republic. Washington and Hamilton saw the importance to the new nation of the Great Lakes and the Mississippi, but the west did not extend beyond that river until 1803 and did not really include the Rocky mountains and the Pacific coast states until 1846 and 1848.

Nor the states formed of the old northwest territory and the territory annexed after 1803 are the great wealth producers of the nation. Secretary Shaw pointed out that the west, which had no commercial or political standing a hundred years ago now produces 90 per cent of the gold, silver and copper of the United States, 75 per cent of the cereals, 65 per cent of the swine, 75 per cent of the sheep, 50 per cent of the cows and 60 per cent of all other cattle.

This is the raw material, but Minneapolis alone manufactures 16,000,000 barrels of flour per annum, and Elgin 3,000,000 of butter. Chicago sends eastward over her railroads 150 tons of provisions every hour, and the west sends forward by lake 150,000,000 bushels of grain every year. The Detroit river floats four times as much tonnage as the Suez canal representing in number of vessels a commerce equal to that of London, Liverpool and New York combined.

The United States paid $15,000,000 for the territory included in the Louisiana purchase, in a single year the states produced grain to the value of $344,961,193 and the people held real and personal property to the value of $3,500,000,000.

LAWYERS CLASSIFIED.

Judge Stephen A. Lowell, in a recent address at the University of Oregon, made the following classification of the members of the legal profession, says the Kansas City Star.

"There are today, roughly speaking, four classes of lawyers—first, the corporation attorney, who draws an assured salary or retainer of ample magnitude; second the lawyer of the old school, who maintains the ideals of his profession, and who is being slowly crushed between centralization of commercial interests on one hand and the sharp practice of his competitors on the other; third, those men nominally lawyers who supplement their meagre professional incomes by collections, loan and insurance business; fourth, the rustler who seeks business by the same methods as the traveling salesman secures his orders, and who either never knows or has forgotten, that the duty of an upright counselor is to prevent, not to foster, litigation."

It is obviously the opinion of Judge Lowell that the lawyer who holds fast to the ideals of integrity and honor is getting the worst of it, and is going to the wall, says the Kansas City Star. If this were really true, or, in any sense, a necessary result of present conditions, nothing could be more deplorable. But it would seem that, with all of the exposure of the legal profession to commercial influences, which is justly complained of, it cannot in the end become thoroughly venal, for that would mean danger and destruction to the whole machinery of justice, which is, of course, an impossible contingency, assuming that the great body of society is honest.

If the courts are to be maintained as the safeguards of equality, and if the original purpose of the lawyer to stand as a minister of justice is not to be wholly abandoned, the bar must purge itself of the vicious influences which have made it the object of reproach, and it is believed that the power of public sentiment, which is becoming aroused in this question, will be sufficient to save the legal profession from utter demoralization.

When the return to more upright methods of practice comes—and it must—then the lawyers, who are classed by Judge Lowell as the old school, and who are now standing as watchmen and sentinels on the walls will be honored as they deserve.

That the "rustlers" spoken of by Judge Lowell—known in Kansas City as the "snitch"—is all too common and numerous must be admitted. He is an offensively familiar figure in this community, and the freedom he has enjoyed in the practice of his indecent methods has made him defiant of public opinion. He has enjoyed the protection of the bar association, but that does not place him beyond the reach of a public reckoning. He is execrated by the people and, after all, the bar association cannot afford to show indifference to public opinion.

The practice of creating litigation and causing mischief and trouble with the intent of reaping personal profit is something quite too abhorrent for lawyers to stand for who wish to enjoy the respect of decent people. The desire not to forfeit so valuable an asset as this will compel the bar association to take up arms against the "snitch" and cast him out. With the bar association it is narrowing down to a matter of self-preservation, and that is an argument that always counts.

TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Here are the ten commandments which according to an American multi-millionaire, whose name is now in

When the young mother is allowed to get up for her first meal, even though she takes it alone, it seems good to her to take this one step nearer the family circle, and she counts the days until her strength will be fully restored. But very often strength does not come as expected, and she lingers in languor and weakness. At such a time there is need of an invigorating tonic, and the very best tonic which a nursing mother can use is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It contains no alcohol nor narcotics. It gives real strength.

"Favorite Prescription" is a reliable woman's medicine. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"I cannot praise Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription too highly as a tonic for tired, worn-out women especially those who are afflicted with female weakness," writes Mrs. Ira W. Holmes, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. "It has helped me very much and a skillful physician said to me in answer to my question as to its efficacy, 'I know of cases where it has really worked wonders.'"
