What it is.
Advertising is the life blood of the business world today, and well directed advertising is like the powerful searchlight of a river steamer, thrown upon a distant cottage on the bank, cutting it out like a picture painted on a black canvas. The timid buyer and the prospective industry will follow the rays of the searchlight of publicity, just as surely as will the eyes of the steamer's passengers follow the light thrown from their vessel. They will not search the surrounding gloom for objects of interest when a beautiful picture is clearly shown before them. Prospective buyers will not search the surrounding gloom for your competitors if the searchlight of publicity is turned on your own place of business.—Canaanota (N. Y.) Bee.

KENTUCKY EDITOR

WATTERSON CLAIMS THE LAW WAS GARBLED.

That General Miles was Within His Rights in Criticizing the Army Reorganization Bill.

Louisville, March 28.—In discussing the Roosevelt-Miles controversy Henry Watterson has the following to say: "Little need be added to what has been said already as to the case of General Miles. From the day he refused to become an orderly for the administration he was marked for punishment. While McKinley lived this was limited to condemnation. But with the advent of Mr. Roosevelt a more drastic course of proceeding was adopted.

"The president fairly leaped at the first chance to assail General Miles that offered itself, or rather seemed to offer itself, for he had, as a matter of fact, no authority under the constitution of the United States or the articles of war to reprimand the general except for a single offense.

Says Law Was Garbled.
"As I have repeatedly shown, without contradiction or denial, the only act for which, under the articles of war, the president may reprimand a officer is indecent behavior at divine worship. General Miles has not as yet been accused of that.

"To forge a pretext for the president the law ruling in such cases was shamefully garbled. The head and front of Miles' offending was that he agreed with Dewey. Yet Funston is permitted and even encouraged to roam at large, abusing his betters without stint or limit.

"Retirement is the club which is held by a chance occupant of the White House over the head of the lieutenant-general of the army, who was fighting the battles of his country when our puissant presidential broncho buster was fighting the battles of the nursery. Just now the club is particularly in evidence, the occasion being General Miles' opposition to the administration's new army bill.

"This bill ought to be entitled 'Act to make the President of the United States a military dictator,' because in effect this is precisely what it proposes.

"Man on Horseback."
"The president has so long and so successfully played the part of the cowboy in politics that he really aspires to become 'the man on horseback.' Differences of opinion are not to be endured.

"The intolerance which marked the Dreyfus epoch in France is to be the rule or measure of the American War Department, an astute and very able New York attorney to find the law for it. Because he answered the call of a committee of congress, Miles is to be retired. Moral: Let the officers of the army beware. Result: Arbitrary power eliminating in absoluteism.

"Thus, slowly but surely is the administration 'Mexicanizing the United States.'
