FOR A CLEAN TOWN.

A commendable spirit of energy is manifest on the part of the common council and the Commercial Association and the citizens generally that indicates good prospects for Pendleton's improvement during the coming summer.

DIRECT LEGISLATION.

Fortunately, the question of direct legislation—the initiative and the referendum—will not be a partisan issue in Oregon politics in the coming campaign.

J. K. JONES' RETIREMENT.

The defeat of United States Senator J. K. Jones, of Arkansas, by ex-Governor Clarke, at the recent primary election, will probably cause a new national chairman to be selected by the democratic central committee.

be men who are selected according to the suggestion of that gentleman. Johnson appears to be the coming man. D. B. Hill is coached by his New York friends, and Arthur P. Gorman is backed by Maryland and other supporters.

A. COWARDLY SULTON.

William E. Curtis writes from Constantinople to the Record-Herald: Every body says that the sultan is made a coward by his advisers, who keep telling him that his life is in danger and who are continually discovering conspiracies which never exist.

A few days later a collision occurred between them and Fuad's servants in which several were killed and wounded. Fuad was immediately arrested and taken to the palace, and after an interview with the sultan was sent aboard the latter's private yacht, which sailed at once for Beyrouth without allowing the prisoner to communicate with his family and friends.

Fuad will have plenty of company at Damascus. Several of the sultan's former favorites are there in exile, hopefully awaiting a day when their sovereign will be less susceptible to the influence of his hired spies and detectives and more trustful of his loyal friends and supporters.

George Dorys, author of the "Private Life of the Sultan," recently published in France, England and the United States, has been sentenced to death. The proceedings are only formal, however, because Mr. Dorys left the country before the manuscript of the book was finished and is now living at Paris.

Mr. Dorys is a son of one of the former ministers of the sultan. His father was a distinguished and influential man, at one time governor of Crete and afterwards Prince of Samos, a post he occupied until his death. The son spent his childhood and youth about the Yildiz Kiosk, where he had extraordinary opportunity of seeing and knowing the extraordinary events of the Ottoman court.

approved and condemned by people in Turkey. Some say that it is accurate and just; others accuse him of being actuated by prejudice and personal spite. He has at least stirred up the sultan and his court to a degree of indignation that has not been shown here for many years.

The missionaries say that Abdul Hamid is a bad sultan, but a good Moslem; that his fanaticism is equal to that of any faker in his realm, and that he is responsible for the persecution of the Christians and for the massacre of the Armenians; that the orders were given by him personally.

A MAIDEN'S MISTAKE.

An Iowa court has rendered a decision that will be considered too mean for anything by the ladies of that state, especially if they are partially artificial in their makeup, for which will be regarded with favor by young men whose courting days are not over.

A young man proposed marriage to a young woman and was accepted. He doubtless loved her all over, but he was particularly enamored of her beautiful luxuriant hair. Expressing his admiration thereof one day to a rival of his fiancée, she said that the crown of beauty ought to be beautiful, as the owner had paid a large price for it.

Let this true tale of courting and a court be a warning to all maidens in a similar situation; if any essential charm of theirs is artificial, let them be careful not to let this fact become known until after marriage; or better, courageously make the fact known and trust to the young man's gallantry and generosity.

But fortunately, at least out here, in Oregon, such a case would scarcely ever come up; physical artificiality is doubtless rare, and few young men would be deceived in any such point up to the proposing state of courtship.—Telegram.
