WOMEN MADE CRAZY

Cry of Fire in a Tobacco Factory Turns 1000 Women and Girls Into a Maddened Mob, Who Fought One Another Like Demons.

YELL OF FIRE WAS A FALSE ALARM RAISED BY ONE OF THE EXCITED GIRLS

They Ran Over One Another, Trampled One Another to Death in Narrow Stairways, Fought One Another, Pulled Hair and Could Not Be Stopped in Their Race to Escape From the Building—The Panic Was Started Because a Boy Who Had His Finger Mashed Cried Out With Pain and a Girl Interpreted it as a Cry of Fire.

Philadelphia, April 30.—A frightful panic was caused at noon in the cigar factory of Harburger & Homan in this city by the cry of fire. One thousand female employes were thrown into a frenzy of madness and made frantic efforts to escape. Piles six and seven deep occurred on narrow stairways, the girls fighting each other and trampling to death those underneath. One sprang from a window and was killed. The list of dead at 2 o'clock was placed at seven. About 20 others were injured. It is expected the number will reach at least 10.

The scene on the stairways while the girls were trying to escape was indescribable. They bit one another's arms and faces and tore the hair from each other's heads. After the panic was over and it was learned there was no fire, it was discovered that the horror was due to a singular incident. A boy had his finger caught in an elevator and screamed fiercely. One of the girls misinterpreted the cry and yelled fire! Employees of the Schuykill arsenal which occupies the first floor of the building, tried to stem the human tide, but were fought by the maddened and frightened girls, and some of the men were badly bitten. The stairs have windows, protected by iron and wooden bars. These bars were covered with blood and pieces of fingernails, torn from the hands of those who were seeking their way to safety.

List of the Known Dead.
At 3 o'clock the list of the dead had not increased. The known dead are: Mary Geneva, aged 12; Helen Tolino, aged 13; Lizzie Tartini, age unknown; Annie Rothchneider, aged 18; Ida Green, aged 10; Mary Rightmeyer, aged 12; an unidentified woman.

After the panic the women and girls tried to regain entrance into the building to look for friends and relatives, but ingress was barred and some of the girls were crushed against the doors. Another panic then seemed imminent, but the police prevented it.
Harburger & Homan is the local house of the tobacco trust. Rigid investigation of alleged insufficient exits is being made.

They refuse to affirm or deny any rumors affecting their proposed actions.
