MANY FOR CIVIL SERVICE.

Largest Class Ever Examined at Walla Walla, Wednesday.

Walla Walla, May 29.—Thirty applicants for places in the civil service formed a class which took the regular examination here yesterday, three of the number being young ladies. This was by large odds the largest class ever examined here, and practically as many as would take the work in a year or two. The largest previous class was 10. The young men were mostly well educated, several being college graduates, all quite young. The examining board was able to secure 30 sets of questions, and no more, hence every blank form was used for the first time in the history of the work in this city.

The initiative and referendum Amendment is No. 80, near the bottom of the ballot. Mark X between the number and the word yes.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Five Graduates Delivered Their Final Essays and Received Their Diplomas at This Time—Orations Were Exceptionally Well Rendered.

Frazer's opera house was packed on Wednesday evening, the occasion being the closing exercises of the Pendleton high school. At this time five young people delivered essays and received their final diplomas.

The stage was tastefully decorated with flowers, palms and potted plants and as the young graduates took their places upon the rostrum they were greeted with enthusiastic applause by friends and relatives. The young ladies were dressed in white, with ribbons of the class colors. Members of the class of '03 acted as ushers for the evening.

Professor Conklin presided over the evening's exercises, and contrary to the usual falling on such occasions, the essays were all brief and to the point.

The program opened with a piano solo excellently rendered by Miss Effie Smith, after which Miss Jennie B. Beattie sang by request, Paul Rodney's "My Dream of You." Miss Beattie was in excellent voice and responded to an enthusiastic encore with the beautiful lullaby "Little Boy Blue."

Thomas Milarkey opened the program of essays with a forceful discussion of the poet Tennyson, his metrical writings and his work as the poet laureate of England, claiming that Tennyson had raised this office to a higher level than any other poet who had held it.

Following Mr. Milarkey, Miss Ethel Kimball gave a review of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," describing at some length the motif of the poem, the causes leading up to it and the manner in which it was written.

Mrs. Roscoe St. Clair Bryson then sang Arthur Sullivan's melodious love song, "Where Is Another Sweet," her well trained voice exactly fitting the spirit of the music. She also was enthusiastically encored.

Miss A. LaVelle Moorhouse, in one of the best efforts of the evening, discussed Tennyson as a poet of progress and immortality, as shown by his poem, "In Memoriam," written shortly after the death of his bosom friend, Arthur Hallam. In this poem, she held the poet shows the progress of his mind up from the depths of sorrow, through doubt and distrust, to full and glorious belief in the immortality of the soul and certain reward after death.

"The King of the Winds," a vocal solo by Fred Hartman, was excellently rendered and in response to an encore he gave the humorous waltz song, "On a Saturday Night."

Miss Bessie Krebs' subject was Tennyson's "A Dream of Fair Woman," a poem in which he reviews as in a dream the notable woman of ancient times. The essay was well rendered and included a recitation of a large portion of the poem under discussion.

Tennyson's "A Becket," by Miss Edyth Epple, was a most pleasing effort and was well worthy the applause which it received. It was briefly a discussion of the life of the great archbishop with renditions of choice selections from the poem in which Tennyson has made him famous for all time.

The program was closed by Stephen A. Lowell, who addressed the graduating class most eloquently outlining the great possibilities which lay before them and urging them to take up their life work with a determination to do something which should better the world and make their lives of more than passing value.
