RANGE TO RANCH

(Concluded.)

tion. At the banks, the men who owned cattle in the early '80's had unlimited credit. The unfortunate individual who owned real estate was out of luck for no bank would loan him any money. But one idea prevailed in the west, and that was to get a "bunch" of cattle. Once they got them they believed themselves comfortably fixed for life.

Rush to Buy Cattle.

Wealthy tenderfeet rushed in like moths to the candle. They didn't know the difference between a Texas steer and a Hereford bull, but they wanted to get into the cattle business in which men were becoming rich over night, and big companies were declaring dividends of 35 per cent. 'Book accounts had not fallen into disrepute and were still accepted in lieu of an actual tally of the herd which was bought. Only a small percentage of the new cattle owners knew anything practical about the business, but all talked learnedly about it. Millions of dollars were recklessly invested in blooded cattle, all unused to exposure, and left to rustle for a living in the open plains like the wild, thrifty western cattle.

"The first intimation of lurking danger came in the winter of 1884. The season was severe and many cattle were on the dead list in the spring. In the following winter a tremendous set back came. Few of the happy owners, as they luxuriated in the aristocratic clubs or basked in the joys of Paris, London or New York, realized that a mantle of heavy snow caked with ice covered the western plains, shutting out even their hardiest cattle from sustenance. In the spring the extent of the destruction was suspected by some but fully realized by none. The spring roundup partially told the tale in carcasses scattered everywhere, in poor, weak cows and the comparative small percentage of calves. In the fall the beef roundup completed the story.

"Then prices fell and steers realized 50 per cent less than the previous year. The fatal fact then started the stockmen in the face, that the ranges were not inexhaustible, and that they were overcrowded. Wire fences were hit upon as the panacea in many quarters and many thousand dollars were invested in inclosing the government domain. The wire fences bought the stockmen in conflict with Uncle Sam, and also caused constant clashing between the small settlers and the big stockmen. Meanwhile the price of cattle constantly decreased on the cattle market until nobody willingly touched cattle company stock or property with a forty-foot pole.

Transition to Small Herds.

"Under these radical conditions a radical change took place in the cattle business in the west. The big outfits or cattle companies owning 10,000 to 100,000 head of cattle in the prosperous era of the business were succeeded by small owners, whose holdings ran from a few hundred head up to several thousand. It was hard pan and close figuring for all the owners, big and little, and it was during this time that the packing house firms, in the earlier days known as the 'Big Four,' got their tentacles so entwined about the range cattle business as to enable them to gradually expand until, as the 'beef trust' they have cornered the entire cattle growing, marketing and retailing business of the United States.

"The packing houses secured their first hold upon the beef growers by loaning them money. Agents of the big packing companies, practical stockmen, traveled throughout the western beef-growing country, and through the agency of local banks made loans upon the herds of cattle, large and small, and it was but a short time until the packing house men had mortgages on every hoof of cattle in the west; and since that time, no matter what the price of meat has been to the consumer, the prices paid to the cattle dealers have been small enough to leave them a bare margin of profit in their business in some years and leaving them to foot losses in others.

"The cattle men have been absolutely at the mercy of the packing houses. If an owner, independent of the packing houses in the matter of loans upon his cattle sought to evade their clutches, he found himself mistaken when he came to market his beeves. Cattle, as you know, must be marketed immediately on their arrival in Omaha, Kansas City or Chicago, the great cattle markets of the country. Every hour stock is kept in the yards depreciates its value, and the combination between the packing house men at these yards, as charged in specifications six of the suit filed against the packers by the government, was worked to a fine finish day after day, month after month and year after year, making the packers millionaires, and giving the growers but scant return in their business. The cattle growers get no benefit out of the exorbitant prices charged consumers. On the contrary, the high prices react upon the cattle grower in the decreased consumption of beef.

"If the government succeeds in breaking up the conspiracy, which undoubtedly exists and has existed for the past ten or more years among the packing houses of Omaha, Chicago and Kansas City, it will place the cattle growing business of the west in the best condition and upon the firmest basis that it has ever been in since its inception thirty years ago."

Found $20,000 in Gold.

A pot of gold supposed to have been buried during the civil war, and worth $20,000, was recently found in a spring by a poor farmer. No doubt the discovery brought him much happiness, but really nothing when compared to the happiness of sickly people who have been restored to health by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. This sovereign remedy is backed by many years of cures, and is highly endorsed by many prominent physicians throughout this country. It is a specific remedy for stomach, liver, kidney and bowel disorders, such as headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, indigestion, constipation and biliousness. Be sure and try it. The genuine must have our private stamp on the neck of the bottle.
