GAME PRESERVES

ROOSEVELT'S PLEA FOR THEIR ESTABLISHMENT

Sounds Warning of Destruction of the Big Game of the United States Though Lack of Proper Preservation.

The following energetic and earnest plea for the better protection and preservation of the big game of the United States is culled from the author-president's book, "The Deer Family":

At the present moment the great herds of caribou are being butchered as in the past the great herds of bison and wapiti have been butchered. Every believer in manliness, and therefore manly sport, and every lover of nature, every man who appreciates the majesty and beauty of the wilderness, and of wild life, should strike hands with the far-sighted men who wish to keep our forests and our game beasts, game birds, and game fish—indeed all the living creatures of prairie, and woodland and seashore from wanton destruction.

Above all we should realize that the effort toward this end is essentially a democratic movement. It is entirely in our power as a nation to preserve large tracts of wilderness, which are valueless for agricultural purposes, as playgrounds for rich and poor alike, and to preserve the game so that it shall continue to exist for the benefit of all lovers of nature, and to give reasonable opportunities for the exercise of the skill of the hunter, whether or not he is a man of means.

These preserves offer serve a most useful purpose and should be encouraged within reasonable limits; but it would be a great misfortune if they increased beyond a certain extent, or if they took the place of great tracts of wild land, which continue as such, either because of their very nature, or because of the protection of the state exerted in the form of making them state or national parks or reserves. The very wealthy man can get hunting anyhow, but the man of small means is dependent solely upon wise and well executed game laws for his enjoyment of the sturdy pleasure of the chase.

True sportsmen worthy of the name, men who shoot only in season and in moderation, do no harm whatever to the game. The most objectionable of all game destroyers, of course, the kind of butcher who simply kills for the sake of the record of slaughter, who leaves deer and ducks and prairie chickens to rot after he has slain them. Such a man is wholly obnoxious; and indeed so is any man who shoots for the purpose of establishing a record of the amount of game killed.

It is to be earnestly hoped that every American hunting or fishing club will strive to inculcate among its own members, and in the minds of the general public, that anything like an excessive bag or ydestruction for the sake of making a record is to be severely reprobated.

After all, this kind of perverted sportsman, unworthy though he is, is not the chief factor in the destruction of game. The professional skin or market hunter is the real offender. Yet he is of all others the man who would ultimately be benefitted by the preservation of the game.

The frontier settler, in a thoroughly wild country, is certain to kill game for his own use. As long as he does no more than this, it is hard to blame him; although if he is aware to his own interests he will soon realize that to him, too, the live deer is worth far more than the dead deer, because of the way it brings money into the wilderness.

The professional hunter who kills game for the hide or meat, or to sell antlers and other trophies, and the rich people, who are content to buy what they have not the skill to get by their own exertions—these are the men who are the real enemies of game.

Where there is no law that checks the market hunters, the inevitable result of their butchery is that the game is completely destroyed, and with it their own means of livelihood. If, on the other hand, they were willing to preserve it, they could make much more money by acting as guides.

It is to be remembered that the preservation of game is by no means merely an affair of the sportsman. Most of us, as we grow older, grow to care relatively less for the sport itself than for the splendid freedom and abounding health of outdoor life in the woods, on the plains, and among the great mountains; and to the true nature lover it is melancholy to see the wilderness stripped of the wild creatures that gave it no small part of its peculiar charm.

It is inevitable, and probably necessary, that the wolf and the cougar should go, but the black-tail and the wapiti grouped on the mountain side, the white-tail and moose feeding in the sedgy ponds—these are beyond measure to the wilderness landscape, and if they are taken away they leave a lack that nothing else can quite make good.

So it is with those true birds of the wilderness, the eagle and the raven; and indeed of all the wild things furred, feathered and fanned. There are many sides to the charm of big game hunting; nor should it be regarded as without its solid advantages from the standpoint of national character.

Always in our modern life, the life of a highly complex industrialism, there is a tendency to softening of the fibre. This is true of our enjoyments; and it is no less true of very many of our business occupations.

It is not true of such work as rail-roading, a purely modern development, nor yet like that of those who man our fishing fleets; but it is pre-eminently true of all occupations which cause men to lead sedentary lives in great cities. For these men it is especially necessary to provide hard and rough play. Of course, if such play is made a serious business, the result is very bad; but this does not in the least affect the fact that within proper limits the play itself is good.

Everybody's for July.

The fiction in the July Everybody's is of unusually strong quality. William Bulfin, who is doing for the Pampas of South America what Gilbert Parker has done for Canada, has a capital story "Herself and Himself." O. Henry, one of the new men, contributes "An Afternoon Miracle." A dialogue by Caroline Duer, "The Independence of Mr. Hastings," and "The Montmorenci Election," by William Henry Drummond, have real humor. "Belshazzar," William Stearns Davis' strong story of the fall of Babylon, is concluded. The final scenes are as vitally interesting as their predecessors. "Tangled up in Beulah Land," is also in its last chapters.

Rain which began falling Tuesday afternoon in the Willamette valley, is heartily welcomed by farmers of that section, as the hot, dry weather was commencing to do considerable damage to the crops of the valley.
