Prince Ito, the "king of the beef breeds," is the champion Angus bull of the world.

Not in points only, but in price, does this splendid animal earn his title of champion of his kind, for he has brought the largest price ever paid for an Angus bull.

In Chicago this animal changed owners at the Dexter park amphitheater of the Union stockyards for the sum of $9,100. The sale was made in the auction ring, which stamps Prince Ito doubly a champion.

There was little or no excitement in the ring until Prince Ito was put up for exhibition and sale by his owner, M. A. Judy of Williamsport, Ind. The mammoth creature seemed to realize his importance as the greatest feature of a ring sale and threw up his broad, full head, with his big ears laid straight back, and looked proud. As the breeders said, "He was every inch a prince of the blood."

PRINCE ITO, WORTH $9,100.

So great an impression did the champion create that the bidding began at almost $1,000 above the former ring price for an Angus bull. The ring record for "market toppers" stood at $3,650. The bidding for Prince Ito began at $4,000.

There were breeders at the sale from all over the country, and the price was quickly raised, $100 a voice.

When the amount of the bid reached $6,000, only two bidders stood out, a man from Louisville, Ky., famous for his cattle, and the new owner of Prince Ito, B. R. Pierce of Creston, Ill., who finally won the champion for $9,100.

Prince Ito is an imported animal of the Aberdeen stock. He was bred in Scotland by Sir George Macpherson Grant and was sired by the great Erica Highland society champion Eltham, out of a Muilben Pride of Aberdeen dam that was sired by the famous Justice.

Prince Ito was imported last season by Mr. Judy after winning the championship of the Highland society at the Royal show of Edinburgh.

No such Angus sire and show bull as Prince Ito was ever before offered for sale in this country. He is the purest of his breed.

On Foot and in Carcass.

It is evident that the production of a beef animal that will win on foot and in carcass competition is, under present standards of judging, a very difficult matter, says The National Stockman and Farmer. The champion of the late Chicago fat stock show was an easy winner when alive. In the opinion of every judge of a beef animal he outclassed his competitors. Yet when his carcass was compared with theirs it did not get a place. It was neither first, second, third nor commended. And, further, when the carcasses of all the prize winners were compared with a load of well finished cattle that won no premiums on foot, which, in fact, were not "good" enough to show, the latter were declared by the judges to be the better.

Such facts may worry the producers of prize animals to some extent, but broadly viewed they are of little importance to those engaged in making beef for the market. These men care little for the awards of the show ring and much for the rewards of the market. It is a point in their favor that the market finds the most economical killers and the best carcasses among cattle that cost the producers much less than high finished show animals would cost them. This fact is worth more to the beef producers of the land than all the prizes that were ever awarded. But the tendency in fat stock shows is toward the standpoint of the slaughterers. The highest finished cattle do not always win. They may be too ripe. If there is any change in the ideals which govern the judging of cattle on foot, it will be toward the standard which the market sets. No buyer for a packing house could hold his position an hour if he bought cattle on the show ring basis. He must buy on the killing basis, and it is probable that fat cattle will ultimately come to be judged as they must be judged.

Sales of Breeding Stock.

The sales of breeding stock so far this year have been satisfactory. With a few exceptions prices have not been sensational, but fair returns were realized. Stockmen know that it is better to sell a large number of animals at fair prices than a few at very high figures. Trade is not restricted. The general quality of the cattle of the country is raised and the demand for breeders enlarged. Many sales are listed for this season, which promises to be a very prosperous and satisfactory one for stockmen.
