CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN

FIRST DOUBLE TRACK LINE BETWEEN CHICAGO AND WEST

A Distinctly Forward Step, Made Necessary by the Increased Travel Resulting from the Phenomenal Growth of the Pacific States and Our New Trade in the Far East.

A double track, block system line of transcontinental railway now reaches out to the westward as far as Omaha. This will be in the way of a distinct revelation to the man who made the trip across the plains twenty-five years ago in a prairie schooner, or on the emigrant train of the seventies.

The rapid development of our great agricultural states has been lost sight of to a certain degree in the discussion that has arisen lately concerning the commercial invasion of China and the far East, our occupation of the Philippine Islands, the annexation of Hawaii, and the whole general movement by which we have suddenly become a world power. But while we have patriotically discussed these questions, commerce has moved ahead positively and relentlessly in the direction of the Pacific coast, raising up new towns, building up old ones, making factories and farms where wild prairies had been.

The result is shown in part in the necessity on the part of the Chicago & North-Western for this double track line, where great trains of live stock and grain move in long lines eastward to feed not only the eastern states, but to afford an outlet for the products of what is now, more than ever before, the granary of the world.

To the westward there is also a continuous stream of travel. The North-Western Line operates three daily passenger trains from Chicago to the Pacific coast. One of these, known as the Overland Limited, is probably the most luxurious and beautiful train in the world. Through Pullman service to Omaha, Denver, Portland and San Francisco leaves Chicago daily heavily loaded with traffic to those points. As to freight movements, the great double track system across the plains is busy carrying manufactures for Asiatic Russia, cotton cloths for the Chinese, various articles required by the pioneers who have crossed the Pacific to Manila and have gone north to the gold fields of Alaska; as well as for the tremendous traffic for the Dakotas, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and the Pacific Northwest, comprising the product of every known branch of the country's commercial activity.

It was in 1848 that the Chicago & Galena Union, having been completed from Chicago to the Des Plaines River, a distance of ten miles, the first train over the line opened the traffic to Chicago by stopping on its way east to take on a farmer's load of wheat, the first grain shipment by rail to Chicago from the west. It may be imagined that this wheat was hardly destined for export, and that the travelers on that junket of early days little thought to what proportions this nucleus of a great railway system would grow.

But the road grew and in 1870 the line to Council Bluffs was complete, and the Pawnees on the Platte and Sioux on the Missouri began to feel the crowding of the white man's outposts. In 1880 Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin had become well settled, while along the Platte the Indians still remained. The North-Western had, however, built a line across Southern Minnesota and into Dakota as far as Watertown, with feeders to various points, while in Wisconsin and Northern Michigan lines had been extended north into the Lake Superior district through Escanaba to Ishpeming.

This all seems very recent but since that time the system has grown until it penetrates nine states of the Union, and its heavy lines of freight trains and its palatial passenger service reach all important points from Chicago to Milwaukee, Madison, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Duluth and Superior, Omaha, the Black Hills, Colorado and the Pacific Coast.

With all this development in various directions the North-Western has never for a moment lost sight of the great fact that the transcontimental business of this nation is for many years to come to be to furnish a great volume of traffic. The Chicago & North-Western is the pioneer transcontinental line. Its little ten miles forerunner of '48, reaching bravely out to the great west, has always kept just a little ahead of the fast pace set for progress by the young man, who, taking Greeley's famous advice, has gone west, until the West and the Far East are ready to join hands as one.

The North-Western has played an important part in the growth of the western country. Double track trunk lines, heavy locomotives and palace-like passenger trains have all come to the West largely as a result of the work of this pioneer line. Elevated tracks in Chicago, electric block signals, daily overland trains, and the steady reduction of time, for overland passenger schedules have all been furthered to a very great degree by the North-Western.

The completion of the double track to Omaha, the first double track between Chicago and the Missouri river, puts the road not only to the front as compared with the other western roads, but in advance of many of the eastern lines that traverse country where the population is much more dense.

The double track to Omaha is part of the general plan on the part of the North-Western, the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific to make the facilities for transportation between Chicago and the Pacific Coast as ample as possible, a plan that will doubtless result in the continued improvement of transcontinental service.
