REBUILD THE WASTE.

The angel of peace has blown out the last glimmering footlight of the sad South African panorama. The defeated Boer, overwhelmed by sheer numbers and resources, goes back to his wasted field, to rebuild his shattered civilization. On every hand he sees the unmarked graves of his fellow comrades, sons and brothers. Wherever he directs his gaze, it falls upon a recent battlefield. His home is desolated. His family circle is broken. His citizenship is taken from him. His little store of belongings has been confiscated by his foe, or sacrificed upon the altar of a lost cause and a fruitless struggle. He has surrendered from exhaustion. His country is devastated. The hope of his countrymen is crushed. Everywhere about him lie the suggestive symbols of defeat.

In such circumstances, under such conditions, will the Boer ever become a good British subject? Will he forget? Will he gather up the fragments of his cherished government and trek northward, or westward once more toward another unclaimed wilderness to found anew a government of his own liking and of his own sovereign choice? If he should do this, would not this same conscienceless conqueror pursue him in his contentment in search of something for nothing? The Boer is human. He has a mind, a memory, a nature and a passion which will be implanted and intensified in his children's children. No amount of mock solicitude for his welfare, on the part of British politicians will assuage the deeply seated injury he feels. It will require generations of Boers to outlive this last annihilation by British greed and force.

In every furrow that he plows in the bitterness of defeat, he will sow the seeds of defiance. He will lead his little child to the new graves of its brethren and lay upon its life the solemn vow to take up the struggle for liberty and vengeance, where the fallen laid it down.

THE ART OF ADVERTISING.

Printers ink is of human origin. Pens, pencils, kodaks and crayons all belong to tottering humanity. Words, even, have a narrow and earthy scope of meaning.

Hundreds of struggling mortals rack their brains hourly and daily in a vain search for some new and thrilling advertisement of their little spot of earth. Sketch artists color some unromantic scene with their fanciful hues, in the old battle for bread and notoriety.

Folders, pamphlets, picture books, story books, fairy tales, facts and fictions interwoven are issued broadcast by real estate dealers to swell the tide of investors. But Nature that unpretentious artist, is master of the profession. She is the greatest of all advertisers. With one stroke she surpasses the tiny efforts of all her compeers.

One bending, ripening wheat field, with its undeniable story, is worth more than barrels of printer's ink. One growing orchard excels the perfection of the camera. The fairy stories of the folders dwarf into insignificance when compared with one mile of the variegated scenery as it exists in June. Nature is tangible. She is not magnified nor distorted. What she is she is. Fifty bushels of wheat standing before the eyes, is a better auctioneer than all the stump orators in the township. One beet field can tell a more startling tale than an album full of kodak views. Seeing is believing. A man with money to invest wants to see something. He has all respect for the divine eloquence of the ad writer, but he would much rather wet his boots with the dew of reality. After he has taken a yard stick and measured the height of an oat straw actually standing on the ground, he feels more secure in letting go his money than if he had feasted his eyes upon the most truthful picture that ever escaped from the omnipresent snapshot artist.

Of all masters of the art, nature wields the readiest pen and most realistic brush.

THE CEMENT AGE.

According to Professor C. F. Morbut, of the department of geology, University of Missouri, we are nearing a time when cement will supplant other materials in building. Already there are cement walks, foundations, fence posts, silos, water tanks, and even cement buildings. Professor Morbut says that the supply of timber will soon be exhausted and manufacturers of cement are experimenting to produce a more durable article at a cost as low as the best grade of lumber on the market. It is the opinion of many distinguished geologists that the next great period in the world's history will be known as the cement age.

Mineral resources of the United States, 1901, now in press, United States Geological Survey, shows that the production of Portland cement in the United States in 1901 was 12,711,225 barrels, an increase of 4,229,205 barrels, or almost 50 per cent over the production of 1900; it was valued at $12,532,360; as against $9,280,525 in 1900. The development of the Portland cement industry in the United States of late years is quite remarkable. In 1890 16 works produced over 335,000 barrels; in 1894, 24 works produced over 798,000 barrels; in 1899 36 works produced over 5,652,000 barrels; in 1900 50 works produced over 8,842,000 barrels; in 1901, 56 works produced over 12,711,000 barrels. In 1890 each one of the 16 cement works averaged a little over 20,000 barrels; in 1901 each one of the cement works averaged over 220,000 barrels for the year. For the years 1897, 1898 and 1899 and 1900, the imports of cement into the United States exceeded 2,000,000 barrels annually. In 1891 the imports were a little under 940,000 barrels. This remarkable disproportion is explained when we find that the percentage has reached from 13.2 per cent in 1891, to 34.7 per cent in 1896; to 73.9 per cent in 1899; to 79.1 per cent in 1900, and to 96.2 per cent in 1901. The total consumption of all kinds of cement in the United States in 1901 was 20,573,538 barrels, and the total domestic production of all kinds of cement was 20,068,737 barrels, valued at $15,786,789.

During 1901, 60 works produced 7,084,823 barrels of natural rock cement, valued at $3,056,278, as compared with over 8,383,000 barrels produced by 64 works in 1900, and with 9,868,000 barrels produced by 63 works in 1899.

The production of slag cement in 1901 amounted to 272,689 barrels, valued at $198,151, as compared with 356,601 barrels valued at $274,208 in 1900.

Up to January 1, 1902, the total consumption of all kinds of cement in the United States has amounted to 270,760,382 barrels, of which total the natural rock cement furnished 71.67 per cent; imported Portland cement, 13.54 per cent; domestic Portland cement, 14.79 per cent.

JEFFERSON'S RELIGION.

The strongest protest against the publication by congress of the "Jefferson Bible," so called, gives a new interest to Jefferson's religious views. In Foley's "Jeffersonian Cyclopaedia," all the written utterances of Jefferson that are of any significance are given in classified form and arranged under each topic in chronological order, so that the development of his views on any subject is easily seen. It should be noted that Jefferson contributed $50 at one time to the Bible Society for the circulation of the Scriptures, and had this to say of the value of the Gospels:

"There never was a more pure and sublime system of morality delivered to man than is to be found in the four Evangelists." (1814.)

Contrary to the general belief, Jefferson was more a Christian in the accepted sense, early in life, than later. About 1776 he at least aligns himself with the Protestants, saying, "If we are Protestants, we reject all tradition and rely on the Scripture alone." In 1819, he wrote to Ezra Stiles, "I am of a sect by myself, as far as I know."

In his "Notes on Religion," (about 1776), there is an implicit affirmation that Jefferson believed broadly in salvation through religious faith. This is assumed to be as much of a fact as riches through labor and healing through medicine, from which secular things, however, Jefferson distinguishes it by the necessity of freedom in use and administration. "I may grow rich by what I am compelled to follow; I may recover health by medicines I am compelled to take against my own judgment; but I cannot be saved by a worship I believed and abhor." Again he says: "God Himself will not save men against their own wills." Further on in the same document he states the same principle affirmatively: "The life and essence of religion consists in the eternal persuasion or belief of the mind."

In late life, Jefferson seems to have attached less importance to faith and belief. Works became his test of a man's righteousness. To Miles King in 1814 he wrote: "I must ever believe that religion substantially good which produces an honest life." Two years later he wrote to Mrs. Harrison Smith: "It is in our lives, and not from our words that our religion must be read."

His last recorded utterance upon the subject of religion is in a letter to Mrs. Woodward, 1824. It smacks of the practical statesman rather than of the ethical philosopher. He says: "I consider religion a supplement to law in the government of men."

"The Jefferson Bible," a mighty interesting little volume, can be secured by sending $1 to the publishers, N. D. Thompson & Co., Thompson building, St. Louis, Mo.

A notable visitor at the Fourth of July celebration at Walla Walla was Tom James, of Missouri, a cousin of the famous Jesse James, of outlaw fame. He recently arrived from Missouri.

IT MUST COME.

As inevitable as the changing seasons of the year is the change which comes to every woman. And just as one anticipates the changes of other seasons it is wise to anticipate this change of season and prepare for it. In this way the discomforts and disasters suffered by many women at the period of change can be avoided or overcome.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a medicine for every season of woman's life, will entirely meet the needs of women at this period of change. It cures the physical ills and relieves the mental anxiety and depression usually associated with this critical period. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep.

J. S. Carlisle, Esq., of Manchester, Coffee Co., Tenn., writes: "I have been using your medicine for the last sixteen or eighteen years in my Poor-house. I am superintendent of the Coffee County Poor-house and Asylum combined. Your Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets' are the best medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended, that I ever used. They saved my wife's life at the time of 'change of life.' I have been recommending your medicine to many afflicted women and have also guaranteed that if it did not cure I would pay back the money spent for it. I have told our druggist that if the people came back and said Doctor Pierce's medicines did not give satisfaction, to give them back their money and charge it to me. I have not once been called upon to refund. I have never found anything to equal the 'Favorite Prescription' for diseases of women."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 21 one-cent stamps for the paper covered book, or 31 stamps for the cloth bound. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.
