LAST DAY OF EDUCATORS

SESSION OF NATIONAL BODY ENDS TODAY.

Same Ardor and Enthusiasm Manifested Early in the Week Marked Final Sessions of the Association. Minneapolis, July 11.-The same ardor and enthusiasm that was manifested early in the week marked the closing sessions today of the National Educational Association's convention. In many respects the convention has been the most notable ever held by the association. In the various departments more than 100 sessions have been held during the week and in all the discussions have been marked by intelligence and antors in their art. Before the general session this morning the principal speakers were William T. Harris, United Hon. States Commissioner of Education; Charles Payson Gurley Scott, editor of the Century Dictionary; Professor Thomas Clarkson Trueblood, of the University of Michigan, and Superintendent Carroll Gardner Pearse, of Omaha.

"The Use and Danger of Method" was the subject of an interesting paper read before the department of elementary education this afternoon by Superintendent W. A. Millis, Crawfordsville, Ind. In part, Professor Millis said:

"Education is a movement in the CAN GET THE HIGHEST MARt price for your pelts, hides and all

Teaching must conform to these laws to be effective. The teacher must understand the principles of education, not as something out of which she may deduce rules of teaching, but as a criterion by which she may test the worth of what she is doing Teaching is not applied pedagogy. It is born of the teacher's own instinct and inventiveness. However, it must not transgress the general principles, else it will be futile. Educational method is to the teacher what chart and compass are to the sailor. Art has to do with particular situations. The particular child and the particular teacher with her resources and limitations are always primary elements to be reckened with. The actual problem of the teacher is to tire liberty in the employment of ways and means, instrumentalities and devices, keeping all the time within the limits fixed by the principles of education,

"Two of the chief dangers in teaching are, restricting the teacher to the practice which some particular teacher or school has found successful, and destroying the vital spark of her work by the lavish attempt to deduce the practice of the school room from laws of psychology. There is great danger in the frequent demand for uniformity of text-books, courses and methods. Each school has the right to do for its pupils what they most need to have done and in the way in which it can best do them. In the effort to make teaching scientific there is always danger of veiling the teacher's per-sonality, obstructing her recourse to common sense and instinct, and of getting in the way of the child's na-tive development.

The Russian government has appointed a commission to investigate agricultural methods and the condition of the peasantry in Russia, with a view to improving both.
