RANGE TROUBLES

LATEST REPORTS SAY NO MORE IS EXPECTED.

At Least Until Herders Begin Bringing Their Sheep Off the Range This Fall, When it May Break Out Again.

The trouble between sheep and cattle men of the interior country is experiencing a lull. Since the shooting of S. B. Barker's sheep in Bear Valley on the 18th of June, there has been no outbreaks and trouble is apparently at an end for the present time, says a John Day dispatch.

The occasion of the shooting at that time was the passing of the bands of sheep through the country to Logan Valley and the range tributary thereto. They disregarded the warnings of the cattle men and undertook to pass through Bear Valley as it was the shortest route and had better range along the road for the sheep. In coming through the valley the sheep were allowed to trespass on what is termed as private range, and the shooting was the result.

As most of the sheep have passed through toward their summer range, no more serious trouble is anticipated until fall, when they will begin to return to the winter range. In the lower sections, no trouble will then be had if the sheep men regard the warnings of the cattle men and keep off what is termed private range. If they do not trouble will again be had. If they do not the same old story will be repeated.

There are conceded trails through the settled part of the country and the sheep herders are supposed to follow these.

If not, the long Missouri rifle which every settler has hanging on the wall of his home, comes down and trouble immediately begins. Spring and fall there are herders refusing to obey these laid down mandates and they are the ones who suffer.

The outside sheep man does not believe in the alleged rights of the settler in dictating the road they shall follow. He contends that all government range belongs to one man as well as the other, and the mere argument that a man is a settler near the government land does not affect it.

The inside man, on the contrary, argues that residence gives a prior right just as a squatter has prior rights on a quarter section of land he holds. Added that his very living is bound up in backing or losing his argument, he becomes a desperate man when the outsider disputes it in a practical way by letting his sheep eat up family range. There is not much law in the trackless interior, and there is little wonder shooting results.

The wantonness of the sheep herder, and the fact that after a few bands of sheep have passed along the public road, range becomes so eaten off that there is nothing left for the herds to follow. Here there is apparently some right on the outsider's part, for it is hard to stick to the blazed trail whose right of way is barren, when succulent grass for starved sheep lies only a few feet on either side.

The problem that confronts Eastern Oregon stock men in one that is hard to solve. The secret of the trouble lies in the overcrowding of the range. Because the business is profitable no one is willing to go out and everyone is waiting for his neighbor to sell and step out of the way. When it is remembered that some of the counties whose residents own the greatest number of sheep have no summer range, and that all these additional flocks are thrown on a few hapless counties like Grant or Cook, the problem is made almost unso- lvable.

News of only one in ten of the ugly bickerings of the interior ever reaches the outside world; at least not for many days. The area is so endless, the distances so magnificent, and the telegraph so remote that the cattle- men and sheepmen are enabled to keep their affairs strictly among themselves. The average stockman will deny there is any trouble in the situation, for he does not like to admit there is anything doing. Especially does he object to being quoted, lest it should lead him into difficul- ties with the other stockmen.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO.

One Hundred and Seventy-Nine Battles Fought on or Adjacent to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

(The Baltimore & Ohio railroad and the Civil War, 1861-1865.) It was the most desirable point of vantage coveted by both federal and confederate armies. In May, 1861, the four federal advance columns concentrated at Parkersburg, W. Va., Wheeling, W. Va., Harper's Ferry, W. Va., and at Washington. To retain the advantage, the federal government established block houses along the railroad from the Monocacy to the Ohio river, besides the forts at Winchester, Harper's Ferry, Cumberland, Piedmont and New Creek (Keyser). The B. & O. was the base of operations for the federal army for nearly four years and from which the government could not take advance line earlier than November, 1864. The B. & O. was the means of communication between the west and the army of the Potomac, and was constantly in a continual state of siege. Harper's Ferry, the key to the Shenandoah valley, first famed through the fanatical attempt of John Brown, in defying the laws and customs of his country, was captured and re-captured eight times in three years. The government arsenal and armories which were located there were destroyed by the government to prevent capture. One hundred and seventy-nine battles of greater or less importance were fought on or adjacent to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, not taking into consideration the innumerable skirmishes.

All through trans from St. Louis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Chicago, Columbus, Cleveland, Wheeling and Pittsburg to the east run via Washington. Send stamp for battlefield map. D. B. Martin, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore, Md.; B. N. Austin, General Passenger Agent, Chicago, Ill.
