TALE OF TWO GAMES

WALLA WALLA WON
ONE AND QUIT ONE.

Visitors Quit Saturday Because They Could Not Bluff the Umpire, and Won Sunday on Account of Three Bad Errors.

There were rooters on the bleachers, and rooters in the stand. In a tall tree by the right fence, were the remnants of a band. But alas, their "roots" were useless! Walla Walla took the buns. For we couldn't hope to beat them when

Three errors
Gave
Five runs.

Indians' rooters gave their war whoop Walla Walla's did the same. But it wasn't noise or rooting that made them win the game.

Twas those fierce and costly errors Made the rooters wish for guns. Two bad throws and a fumble, made

Three errors
And
Five runs.

About 400 enthusiastic fans came down from Walla Walla Sunday to see the Indians lose the third game of the series to the Sharpshooters, through three errors which gave the visitors the five runs chalked up to their credit at the end of the ninth.

The game was one of the fastest exhibitions played here in some time, and the Indians were pinch winners except for the painful and costly errors made in the first and seventh. Both sides played good ball, the Sharpshooters doing the cleanest work of any of their games here, but, as one spectator remarked after the game, the Sharpshooters have about as much license to beat the Indians as they have to take an excursion trip to the moon.

New Twirler in the Box.

Two or three of the local boys were a little off Sunday, and the consequence was that the team work was not as good as usual. Salisbury, the new twirler from Portland, had only arrived that morning and, being still tired from the trip, was not up to his usual standard, but pitched a first-class game, few hits being made off his delivery, and some of these might have been prevented by closer field work. The wild throw which let in two runs in the first did not discourage him and he settled right down to work, pulling out of several tight places, and at one time striking out the last two men while the bases were full. He is a strong pitcher, and when he gets a little more in touch with the team will be a most valuable addition.

Hays repeated his regular performance of smashing out a two-bagger when put into the game at a critical time, and would have made the desired win-out but for the disastrous seventh.

How the Game Was Lost.

This is the way the loss came off: Two Walla Walla men were on bases when Schmidt fumbled a nice grounder which came down toward second and which if quickly handled would have retired the side. This filled the bases and a second later Salisbury threw a wild one over Adams' head, which let in two runs, the third for the inning and fifth for the game coming in a few moments later.

Walla Walla Played Well.

Gatch, the slab artist for Walla Walla, was up to his usual standard, but was freely batted by the Pendleton slingers, and but for his excellent field support Gatch would have been batted out of the box long before the game was over. "Spec" Hurlburt was in center with the goods, as usual. Treadway captured a high fly in right at a bad time for Pendleton, and Croll at short and Mullane at first, talked only about half their limit and played more ball than heretofore.

Pendleton Was in Game Also. Although behind the bat for Pendleton, made his usual catches of pop-ups, Stovall at first was in the game all the time. Wilner made another of his sensational throws from right field to third, Brown in center and Hammond in left, took everything that came their way. Schills at third was doing a few stunts himself, including a grand stand play in the shape of a running left handed catch which he juggled for several seconds before, fully deciding to freeze onto it; and Fay at short made the star play of the game by running "Spec" Hurlburt down between second and first, while at the same time watching home plate and holding Kelly at third.

Umpire Was a Bit Off.

Buchet, formerly first baseman for Walla Walla, did the referee work on Sunday, and while he was a big improvement over the former umpire, still he gave Pendleton considerably the worst of some close decisions, which might have made a great difference in the outcome of the game.
