were four cows, a bull and two calves i nthe lot the other morning when, hearing a terrible din, he trotted out with his gun to see what ailed his pets. Three 'gators had managed to get into the inclosure from the riverside, and while one was stalking with a calf that he had managed to get to the water's edge, the other two were fighting the enraged cattle.

'Gator No. 1, the biggest of the lot and an ugly customer, was fighting the bull, while No. 2 was trying to keep out of the way of the frequent the furious rushes of the cows. No 3 had the calf in charge. It was bleat-

blow with its tail that staggered him. With a loud bellow of rage the bull turned quickly and with good luck hooked the 'gator on the side, half turning him over. The saurian raged and bellowed and finally managed to get loose. He then struck the bull again a sounding whack, half knocking him down. Following this he darted up and caught the bull with his jaws on the nose. The bull bellowed with pain and stamped on the 'gator's head. For a few minutes they plungeed around and then the bull got loose. With more caution he plunged at the 'gator and managed to gore him badly, partly ripping his side open. The gator had enough now and tried to crawl away, but the bull kept on
