MARKET ADVANCES

WHEAT IS AGAIN BACK AT 50 CENTS PER BUSHEL.

Farmers Were Getting Gloomy, But They Are Now Asking Why Prices Are Not Better Than This Time Last Year—Say the Circumstances Justify it.

Wheat has taken another bound upward today and is quoted at 50 cents. This is the highest figure it has reached for the past three weeks, when it fell from 52 to 48 cents within a week of the time the markets opened.

Long Faces.

This fall was the cause of much lamenting on the part of the large wheat raisers and many faces were beginning to assume that far-away look which indicates that when the crop is harvested and sold there would be barely enough left out of it to pay the expenses and the farmer was saying "I will have to slave another year before I can be able to see out over the little petty debts which have piled up against me."

Now More Jubilant.

However, the announcement that wheat has taken a jump and is again soaring around a fair price, the farmers are again feeling jubilant, and are looking on with expectations of a further rise. Whether or not this will come remains to be seen, but the indications are that 50 cents will be the prevailing price.

Would Like to Know.

The farmers are wont to wonder what is the matter with the wheat market. To compare last year with the present year wheat is not selling at the figure it should. One prominent farmer remarked yesterday:

"I cannot for the life of me understand the wheat market. At this time last year wheat was selling at the same figure it is today. Liverpool markets are just what they were at that time and charters are about half what they were a year ago. Now, will someone explain to me why wheat is not selling at a few more cents than it did last year? With the world's markets at almost the same figure, charters one-half less and the reduction on transportation, wheat ought to be several cents higher than it was under the prevailing circumstances last year."

The above has been voiced by several farmers lately and if some one will kindly give the solution to the query it will be kindly received by the wheat growers.
