ADVANCEMENT OF NEW; RETIRING OF OLD.

What Water and Industry Are Doing and What They Will Do—Gardens Forging Their Way into Desert.

(By a Staff Writer.)
I have just returned from a trip of several weeks' duration by wheel, through Eastern Oregon, Washington and Idaho. Everywhere I was struck with the evidence of prosperity.

In the fields the go-devils are raking up the hay to be placed upon the haystack. Sleek and well-kept cattle graze upon the hillside or in the meadows. Here you pass through a country that seems like one vast inland sea of grain. The headers are busy reaping the wheat crop. The fruit trees are bending beneath their loads of ripening fruit. Cars and boats are taxed to take the product of the field and orchard to market, and this fertile and productive region was a few short decades ago called the Great American Desert and was given over to the Indian and the coyote.

Glimpse of the Old.

One may yet see the two conditions existing side by side in certain places. In Wallowa county I stopped half way up a steep hill to rest a moment. To the left the hill rose steeply, the rocks and the parched and thirsty earth presenting a scene of desolation. To the right of the road the land rose in a series of rolling hills. Stunted sage brush and greasewood dotted the ground. A coyote trotted away up a ravine and reaching the hill top paused and looked back inquiringly toward the road. High above in the blue floated wide circles, a buzzard. What had once been a horse lay bleaching in the hot August sunshine. It was a typical scene from the old-time Great American Desert.

And Then the New.

I climbed on and reached the hill top. Below on the other side lay the bright green of the alfalfa fields the golden yellow of ripening grain and the paler yellow of the oats. It was the same land—what made the difference? Just what makes the difference between the eastern and western slopes of the Cascade Mountains—water.

The farmer had water and the desolate, sun-parched desert, plus the water, turned out three tons of alfalfa to the acre and 40 bushels of wheat per acre. Irrigation by government aid or by private enterprise is the solution of the arid land question.

Irrigation.

There are thousands upon thousands of rich and fertile acres lying now untaken in Eastern Oregon, and to be had for $1.25 per acre which with water, would be worth $20 to $50 an acre. The total number of irrigators in Oregon in 1900 was 4636. The total area irrigated was 388,310 acres, all but 199 acres of which land was irrigated from streams. The 199 acres were irrigated by pumping plants from wells. In 1899 there were 178 persons who irrigated their lands in Wallowa county. This figure has been considerably increased since that date.

In Union county there were 494 irrigators. By far the largest portion of the irrigated area is used for crops the rest being irrigated for pasture. In Umatilla county 329 irrigators are recorded for the year 1899. The area irrigated in Umatilla county being 118,923, of which 59,299 acres was devoted to hay raising. When the government establishes storage basins in the Blue Mountains when the heads of the streams are in burnt districts reforested so as to hold the snow and let it down slowly in place of with a rush as in deforested regions, when water by irrigation is to be had to furnish the land as much moisture as is given by an annual rain fall of 25 to 30 inches, we will see the great Inland Empire once more a vast granary.

The hillsides that now lie parched and baked will be covered with moving grain, while the valleys will raise innumerable carloads of fruit.

JUSTICE COURT GRIND.

Man Convicted of Stealing a Half Sack of Onions—Another Got a Watch and Will Get Time.

Justice Fitz Gerald was busy this forenoon dealing out justice to law-breakers. Only one trial was had before him, but another man was bound over to the district court.

William Cameron Fined.

William Cameron, a young man from the reservation, was fined $25 for stealing a half sack of onions. A. D. Blue was the prosecutor and the evidence indicated that young Cameron, who lives next door neighbor to Blue, had gone into Blue's garden on the 17th and helped himself to what onions he wanted. The worst of the affair for Cameron was the fact that he did not get away with the onions. He was caught while in the garden pulling the onions and when he had his sack only about half full. When he was approached he carried the onions out into the brush and concealed them. Then he went back into the garden and talked with those who discovered him. After he left the owner of the garden made a search and found the sack containing the vegetables and took them home for his own use. Then a warrant was sworn out and Cameron was arrested. The fine and costs were paid. The total amounted to between $40 and $50.

Most Effective Advertising.
That advertising is the most effective which attracts the eye and appeals to the brain. Strong adjectives may be as much out of taste in an advertisement as in a bit of more aspiring literature. Exaggeration is always to be avoided. People nowadays demand sincerity in all matters of business. It is observable that all the big and successful advertisers are most careful as to their statements of fact. They realize that confidence is the key-stone in the arch of trade. Their success came of their jealous regard for their work.

bound over to the district court in the sum of $250 for the theft of a watch. Several days ago J. L. McCullough, of Butter Creek, was asleep in the back of the State saloon and Havini entered the place. McCullough's watch chain "looked good" to him and he walked over and snatched it out of his pocket. The chain was gold and worth about $10, while the watch was only silver and perhaps worth $5. The loss of the watch was made known to the police and an investigation made. Policeman Fee learned that a watch had been soaked at a saloon for 25 cents, but later redeemed. After looking around the man was found and placed in jail, but the watch was gone. With some clever "sweating" Policeman Fee got the Fin to divulge where he had hidden the watch and it was located. It had been placed in an old tin can and planted under the leaves on the river bank in the north side of town.

William Stewart Larson, of Jefferson, near Salem, was bound over for bigamy yesterday.
