GORDON SENT UP

WILL SERVE TWO YEARS
IN STATE PENITENTIARY.

Covini Gets Eighteen Months and Spurlock Was Fined $40—Reed and Hines Bound Over.

"It is the judgment of this court that you be confined in the state penitentiary for a term of two years," said Judge W. R. Ellis in passing sentence upon Clay Gordon Friday afternoon.

Gordon is the young Milton lawyer who fleeced the people of the east end of the county out of money and property by his Sunday school appearance which worked him into the confidence of the people. His career is well known to East Oregonian readers, consequently it is useless to repeat the story.

When taken before the court Gordon pleaded guilty to the charge of obtaining money under false pretense and begged the court to be lenient with him. In passing sentence Judge Ellis delivered the following pointed address to Gordon, which, if heeded by all young men, would keep them out of trouble:

"I have enough confidence in American people to believe that a young man can rise to the highest positions in professional life or enter the circles of our best society by the sheer force of his own personality and character regardless of his birth or ancestral nobility, even though his father was a hod carrier and his mother a washer-woman. You have violated the most sacred confidence of the people of Milton and have tempted to gain both social and financial prestige by falsifying as to your people, birth and ancestors."

ANGORA GOATS.

Farmers Bowlby and Taylor Tell of Their Value.

The Daily News reporter dropped in this morning on Farmers Bowlby and Frank Taylor while they were discussing the vast importance to Astoria of the Angora goat industry. "A superior judge from Seattle has just bought 200 Angora goats in Polk county, 1 see," said Farmer Bowlby. "He paid $5 a piece for them and will stock his ranch near Seattle with this friend of the farmer."

"Josiah West, of Clatsop Plains has 200 of these goats on his Marion county farm," chimed in Farmer Taylor. "They each return $1 a year or 20 per cent on the investment with their wool or mohair, which is in great vogue at this time. It has been down to 20 cents a pound, but is now up to 28 cents."

"Then, too," remarked Farmer Bowlby, "there are the annual kids worth $2 a piece or 40 per cent more on the investment, as it costs nothing to keep them." "Yes," said Taylor, "concurring," and the greatest return to the farmer is found in the way they clear the land without cost. A herd of goats will, in two or three years take out all the stumps on a clearing. A farmer needs only to cut down his timber and sell it for lumber or cordwood at a fine profit in Clatsop county. Then the Angora goats will quickly destroy all the vegetation and have the stumps rotted out. It means a saving of $40 an acre in clearing off the timber lands of Clatsop county or millions of dollars of money in the pockets of our farmers."

"Yes, indeed," concurred Bowlby, "and much of our land is already burned off so there is nothing to be done in order to make a fine hay farm on the hills except to invest in Angora goats, which yield 60 per cent on the investment pending the clearing of the farm that is to enable the farmers of Clatsop to have the best orchards and finest of dairy ranches in the west."

These two enthusiastic farmers then pledged themselves to aid the Daily News in every way to secure the Angora goat industry for Clatsop county.

The Angora goat takes its name from a town named Angora in Asiatic Turkey, 200 miles from Constantinople. It is situated on an elevated plain adapted to pasture and is celebrated for its breeds of goats, having long silky hair, which is manufactured into shawls and a stuff called mohair. Large quantities of this hair are exported and the goats have been successfully introduced into the United States. The counties adjoining Yakima bay have succeeded finely with these goats and have now a national reputation in the industry. Clatsop county is said to be a counterpart of Turkish Angora.—Astoria News.

PRESIDENT'S BOAR HUNT.

Tells the Story Himself and Shot a Lucky One.

President Roosevelt told the story of how he killed the wild boar as follows:

"I fired but once," he said. "The bullet pierced both lungs and the heart. I had not intended to do any hunting, but Senator Proctor lured me into it. You should have seen me. Senator Proctor loaned me his old hunting coat; someone else donated a pair of blue overalls, and Bill Morrison contributed shoes and socks."

Bill, the Senator and myself made up the party.

"We had no luck at first, but just about dusk a wild boar bolted out of the brush, 50 yards ahead of us. Bill saw him first, the senator next, and I last of all. The boar took a slanting course to the right through the thick brush, with us after him. A second later we lost him in the gloom. But we kept up the chase, and suddenly I spotted him."

"There he is!" I shouted. "Wrong!" yelled the senator, squinting ahead: "That's a deer."

"It's the boar I tell you," said I, bringing my rifle to my shoulder. "Senator's right," chimed in Bill Morrison, "it's a deer for sure." But I knew better, and blazed away. It looked like a miss for a minute. Like a frightened rabbit the big boar plunged straight ahead, going faster than before the shot. But just as I took sight for a second try he pitched forward and rolled over dead.

"Now that's my story of the hunt, gentlemen. And, as to that shot of mine, all that I have to say is that it was a mighty lucky one."

Frazer Opera House.

The beautiful scenic settings for the first part of Richards & Pringle's big minstrel performance at the Frazer theater, September 10, is an exact reproduction of a Japanese village, with its breezy, luxuriant perspective and unique architectural conceits. The idea is refreshingly novel and adds a striking oriental beauty and splendor to a usually stereotyped part of a minstrel show. Every feature of this big combination is presented in the same meritorious way—different from any other similar organization and of the very best. The big street parade takes place immediately after the train from Portland arrives on the day of the performance.

Your Children's Education

Is it being neglected? Is the musical part of it being remembered? Parents, if you have daughters see that they have an opportunity to learn to play a piano. It means so much to them in the future. It means that when meeting with other people in a social way, they can do something to be entertaining, and when at home can make the evening pass pleasantly both to themselves and those about them.

There is no excuse for any family to be without a piano in the home, when we offer them at such reasonable prices and on terms that all can meet.
