Bartender McEnerney Witnessed His Employer Commit the Terrible Crime and Notified the Police.

New York, N. Y., Sept. 27.—The body of a well-dressed man, mutilated and dismembered was found in the cellar of a restaurant in this city this morning. The proprietor was arrested and will be held pending an investigation. The body has not been identified.

Bartender McEnerney, of the Empire restaurant and hotel, where the murder was committed has confessed to the police that he saw Manager Tobin commit the horrible crime.

Tobin cut off his victim's head with a meat cleaver and stripped the body of the arms and legs and threw the head into a roaring furnace. He was in the act of disposing of the body when the police arrived.

The police first learned of the crime through a mysterious telephone message coming from an informant who declined to give his name. The officers immediately went to the scene and noticed the horrible stench which arose from the cellar. They threw the door of the furnace open and saw the blazing head. Other portions of the body were found on the floor of the basement.

A search for the culprit was immediately commenced and found the terrified Tobin crouching behind a barrel. At headquarters he was placed in the sweat-box and an effort made to compel him to confess.

Tobin's victim has been identified by papers found in the basement where the crime was committed, as James Craft, a deputy sergent, of Glen-Cove, Long Island. Tobin is non-committal and sullen, with a hang-dog air. According to witnesses, Craft was seen to display a huge roll of bills in the cafe last night, leading to the belief that he was killed for the money.
