

FADS OF FASHION

NEW YORK SETS THE PACE AND OTHERS FOLLOW.

Winter Wraps Are Now the Subject of Consideration and Many Chic Effects Are Brought Out.

New York, Sept. 29.—This is a year when summer prefers not to linger in the lap of autumn and there is already a touch of frost in the air which reminds us of winter wraps.

Winter furs are in the shops in gorgeous arrangement, but at top-of-the-season prices, so it is not likely that many will be purchased right now. A few weeks, however, and a reduction will have been made to suit the purses that are now unequal to the emergency of fashion.

Cloth wraps have been on the market long enough to be purchasable now and some very smart novelties are to be had at reasonable prices. Fortunately for the women who can indulge her fondness for variety there are innumerable cloak models from which to make a selection this season. Unfortunately for the one-wrap-a-season sisterhood light colors predominate and few, if any, subdued tones are seen outside of black.

There is, however, one question upon which the arbiters of fashion seem to agree; the strictly modish wrap this winter will not be more than three-quarter length. Skirts will remain long for street as well as for house wear and the inconvenience of lightening a sweeping heavy wrap in addition to the folds of the frocks when necessity demands it can readily be appreciated.

The very long coats that enjoy any degree of popular favor are appropriately limited to evening use and upon these all expense and elaboration employed on gowns may be seen.

One of the many varieties of fur which will appeal to the popular purse as well as artistic eye is Russian colt. This is a rich dark brown, shading to quite a pale tone of fawn and is used for entire garments as well as bands for tailor-made gowns. Combined with the rich autumn brown satin faced cloths, it makes an effective trimming.

An awfully chic design which certainly does not cost a great sum has the skirt developed in inexpensive ladies cloth, the color being chestnut brown. Around the hips the skirt is perfectly plain, the fullness being disposed of at the back in eight small box plaits which are equally divided at the sides of a wide center plait. The flare at the bottom is gained through a graduated flounce of the cloth and at frequent intervals medallions of heavy yellow lace are applied and finished with small groups of little fur tails.

The waist is plaited in the back and fits the figure snugly. At the front the plaits are wider than at the back and each is adorned with the lace medallions and groups of tails from shoulder to waistline. The blouse effect of the bodice opens over a vest of white satin overlaid with cream lace.

Accompanying this costume is a Cavalier hat of brown French mohair. The Cavalier shape is a new design and its flaring shape is almost universally becoming. An incongruous combination in the hat, however, is shown in a facing of white chiffon and the top is trimmed with rich, waving plumes fastened beneath a rosette of white satin and cream lace and a bow of brown satin ribbon.

"Pointed skunk" no matter how unlovely the name, is another of the pretty inexpensive furs, if the latter adjective may be employed to distinguish the obtainable from the unobtainable. One of the smartest ways in which it is used is in the new motor coat. This confection reaches below the hips, is lined with dark green satin figured with pink rosebuds and fastens with smoke pearl buttons. The collar is large and square and big revers open over the vest of the bodice which is worn beneath to lend the requisite air of femininity.

The fashionable futurity of sleeves is decided and the voluminous shape is the accepted one. This is assured by the fact that it is shown on all winter wraps. It is easy enough to shift such details in less substantial garments than wraps, but once they are accepted for outer garments, their success is assured, because to change would be not only expensive to the purchaser, but no manufacturer as well.

Even the fur wraps have sleeves arranged in the full bell-shape. A pretty design which is adapted to the remodeling is a deep flaring cuff, since it affords the fashionable shape without materially affecting the fundamental work of the sleeve.

The old favorite, chinchilla, seal-skin, baby lamb, Russian sable and silver fox held undisputed sway and are combined in the most unexpected way with laces, passementaries and the more fragile materials such as chiffon, tulle, etc. Upon the collarettes, which, by the way are very nice, when one cannot afford an all-fur coat, many of the yokes are composed of heavy lace or velvet and cloth appliques, while other designs have simply a yoke of fur with a frill of velvet or cloth to finish it.

Muffs match coats and collarettes in nearly all instances, but the widest limit is allowed in the selection of boas.

Heavy materials made tailor-fashion will be worn with boas. Collarettes and muffs as long as possible. One smart dress is in geranium-red pebble cloth flecked with opal-grey silk hairs to form a very elegant effect. The skirt is trimmed around the bottom with scrolls of dark taffeta stitched with grey and these widen considerably as they extend up the skirt and turn into fancy curves. This same scroll effect is carried out around the hips and the gores so arranged that there is no fullness to be distributed about the figure.

The blouse is laid in box plaits stitched with tiny scrolls of taffeta. It is very full, so much so in fact that at first glance it resembles one of the flowing little Empire Eton jackets. Closer inspection, however, reveals a deep belt of boned velvet, which nearly reaches to the bustline and over which the bodice falls. The yoke is stitched elaborately with dark red silk bound with panne and the sleeves which have full puffs below the elbow are gathered into a band of taffeta.

This dark shade of red is one of the prettiest of the season's tones and is unusually becoming. The hat worn with this costume is notable chiefly for its color scheme, as there is no departure from the prevailing shape. At either side beneath the brim there are massed dark red silk roses and rich heliotrope-blue silk poppies. There is just enough green to perfect the harmony which is one of the loveliest yet seen. The roses and poppies are massed around the crown and terminate at the back with a bunch of rose-buds, with no other trimming.

Although many close-fitting bodices are affected this autumn it is hard to entirely eliminate the Eton from fashionable effects. It is suggested in many delightful little ways upon new designs. The newest and perhaps the smartest is allowed to reach only to the bust line, and from here it is sharply cut away to a decided point which extends almost to the waistline where it is turned back abruptly to form an inverted reverse.

Tunics, it is safe to predict, will not be worn this season, but their effect will be simulated by a series of fullness which compose some of the newest skirts. Three is the usual number employed and it must be admitted that though the style is not universally becoming, it is particularly effective for tall slender women carried out in lustrous pliable fabrics.

NEW YORK DEMOCRATS.

Men and Measures Political Now to the Front in the Empire State.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 29.—Nearly all the Democratic state leaders of prominence are here and the hotels present scenes of political activity on the eve of the state convention. With former Senator Hill again in the saddle the convention promises to be the most interesting the Democrats of the Empire State have held for a number of years. It is admitted on all sides that Mr. Hill will name the man to head the state ticket. It is admitted also that after complimentary votes have been given to the different men in the field and home pride has been satisfied, the act of the delegates in casting ballots for the man who is to be the candidate will be merely perfunctory. While the name of Bird C. Coler, former controller of New York City, continues to be heard frequently in connection with the gubernatorial nomination, his selection for the honor is not regarded as a certainty by any means, because it is known that a strong effort is making to placate such old-line Democrats as August Belmont, William C. Whitney, Daniel S. Lamont, W. B. Hornblower, Wheeler H. Peckham and others who do not look upon Mr. Coler with great degree of favor.

There is still talk of Judge Parker, Judge O'Brien of the Court of Appeals, Justice Cullen of the Supreme Court and Judge John Clinton Gray of the Court of Appeals. For second place on the ticket the name of Elbert B. Morris, president of the State Grange, is prominently mentioned.

While the younger element is busy discussing candidates the old wheel horses of the party are using their influence to bring about the adoption of a platform that will appeal to the better element of the party and assist in bringing about Democratic unity and harmony in the commonwealth. If their counsel prevails in the convention will adopt a platform of conservatism, a platform ignoring monetary issues, minimizing, if not wholly avoiding, criticism of expansion, and coming out boldly for tariff revision on lines of humanity to Cuba and of equitable reciprocity. The desire of the conservatives is to treat the trust-question rationally, and the question of corporations generally in a manner as far away from Tom L. Johnsonism as possible. Then on state issues the purpose is to take pro-tanal ground that will appeal to the interests of Brooklyn and of Buffalo and virtually the interests of the whole state.

Should the resolutions be framed along this line the convention's action will coincide with the avowed purpose of the old-line Democrats to discourage the bad influence of Tammany and to make Kings county and the up-to-date Democracy the manifestly dominant power in the party in New York state.
