ON THE GOLF COURSE.

The Men Were There, But the Girls and Lunches Were Not.

Did you ever get left? This question is suggested to the male members of the local golf club. It is claimed that they had great expectations in store for the early hours this morning. It appears that on Friday evening there was an agreement entered into whereby the lady members of the club were to get up at 5 o'clock this morning and prepare lunch and serve it on the grounds. The boys were up bright and early, some of them even before day-break, and they were on the grounds waiting for daylight and the dainty lunch to be served by such—well, the boys soon arrived. The game proceeded, and they played and watched and played and watched until all the balls were lost. It is claimed that they looked more longingly toward the town than they did with interest to the game—anyway, the balls were all lost.

Act IV, Scene 2.

A hungry set of gentlemen wearing sweaters were seated at tables at the French restaurant. It was not a jolly crowd, but a hungry one. They ate in silence. Their thoughts ran back to the previous evening. The question was, did the girls oversleep themselves, or was it intended as a practical joke?

Moral: Do not keep your best girl up too late at night.

SMALLPOX AT W. A. C.

"Curly" Thompson is Isolated There and Many Were Exposed—He Got It at Walla Walla.

Pullman, Oct. 18.—There is smallpox in the Washington Agricultural college and although the single patient has been quarantined and strictly isolated it is supposed some dozens of the students of the institution were exposed to infection from the disease before this step was taken. The patient is Leo Thompson, known in the Inland Empire baseball league as "Curly" Thompson. He played second base for La Grande, but is believed to have contracted the disease at Walla Walla where he was most recently before coming to the college. As soon as the fact became known that a student in the college had smallpox the authorities took action. Thompson was removed to an isolated section of the grounds and a building hastily erected. It is not yet known whether the disease will spread here.
