W. EPINGER SENTENCED TO EIGHTEEN MONTHS.

Stole a Watch From the Pocket of a Friend of Short Acquaintance—is a Man of Intelligence, But Liquor Got the Best of Him.

W. Epinger was sentenced this morning by Judge Ellis to serve a term of 18 months in state prison. Epinger will be remembered as the man who came here two weeks ago and registered at Hotel St. George from San Francisco. He claimed to be representing the Western Printing Company, and was soliciting ads to be printed on cards to be posted conspicuously in different places over the country.

He found several victims here and from most of them collected in full for the advertisement and then blew the money for whisky. He also found some who were gullible enough to loan him money on the plea that he would pay it back as soon as his delayed check reached him from his house. This was what first got him into trouble. Several of his victims got together and after comparing notes, and Epinger had not shown up as agreed with the money to pay back that borrowed, the concluded that he was a fraud. The police took him in charge, but as there was no criminal charge against him, he was released.

That night he became acquainted with M. S. Monteith and after following him to his room touched him for his watch. This was the undoing of Epinger. Complaint was made against him and the evidence was so strong that he was thrown into jail. Here he remained and announced that he would fight the case, but yesterday he changed his mind and pleaded guilty, throwing himself on the mercies of the court. The court was not inclined to be very lenient with him and Epinger was dumfounded when the judge announced that he would have to serve 18 months in the service of the state without any compensation other than his board and a striped suit.

Epinger had papers with him which showed that he had a family in California. He also showed very high intelligence, but after reaching Pendleton he at once filled up on whisky and treated everybody he met. This run him short of money at once and it is thought that while temporarily daft with booze and the thought that he had to have money to pay his hotel bills he took the watch without realizing the enormity of his crime. He will have plenty of time now to consider the error of his ways. He will be taken to Salem in a few days.

MORE SCHOOLS VISITED.

County Superintendent Nowlin Finds Schools Running Smoothly.

School Superintendent J. F. Nowlin is still spending most of his spare time visiting schools. The first of this week was spent in calling on the Pilot Rock schools, Luhrs district school, Belts district school, districts Nos. 43 and 87, south and west of Pendleton.

The Pilot Rock school is the largest of any of the above. The principal of this school is Lynn Gubser, and he is ably assisted by Mrs. Pearl Ryerson. The primary room is crowded to its utmost capacity with students and the school is running very smoothly. The enrollment is 61.

The Luhrs school is being taught by S. S. Darnell. He has 19 pupils and the school is in fine working order with the pupils all very much interested in the work.

William Eames is teaching the Birch Creek school, called the Doug Belts district. This is Mr. Eames' first term in this county, he coming here recently from Union county, but he is giving entire satisfaction. The enrollment is 23.

District 43 is being ably handled by Miss Albine Humphrey, recently from the valley. She has an enrollment of 30 and all like her.

The school at the mouth of Stewart Creek was also visited and found to be running in perfect harmony. The enrollment is 20 and the teacher, who came recently from California, is giving satisfaction to all.

IN EARLY DAYS

Story of a Massacre Near Pendleton—"Dead Man's Hill."

On the hill above Cayuse Station, east of Pendleton, are the graves of three murdered men. The place is called "Dead Man's Hill." In July, 1878, during the Bannock Indian war in Oregon and Idaho, three freight teams, consisting of 12 mules and three great blue wagons each, started from La Grande across the Blue mountains to Umatilla landing. They were driven by Jack McCoy, Jack McLaughlin and Jim Myers. They left La Grande against the entreaty of friends. They were told of the dangers of the trip. But they started, against the best judgment of everybody. Indians were known to be in the mountains. They had stolen stock at different points along the freight road. The freighters camped at Meacham the first night out, without molestation. But before dark the second day they lay murdered on top of "Dead Man's Hill," their wagons destroyed, their stock stolen and their freight scattered over the scene of their murder.

From the indications at the time, it was thought they saw the Indians coming and each man cut his saddle loose from the team and started to escape from the bloodthirsty savages. They were found the next day a short distance from their wagons with their skulls crushed.

The Indians cut the spokes in the wheels and let the wagons drop down upon the axles. The freight consisted of flour and bacon. The Indians cut the sacks open and from their ponies scattered the flour over acres in extent. The burlap in which the bacon was wrapped was cut open and the bacon scattered. The harness was cut into chips. The beds of the freighters were carried away.

The stage from La Grande came upon the scene of the tragedy the morning following. It was a sight that will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. The monster wagons were standing in the middle of the road, like dismantled ships, with wheels cut into kindling. The freight was scattered everywhere upon the mountainside, and the murdered frontiersmen, who had braved many perils before this, were lying cold in the morning dews. Friendly hands gathered them into rude coffins and laid them to rest as quickly and silently as the surrounding dangers would admit of.

It was necessary to cut a road through the timber, around the wagons, before the stage could pass. It is one of the many sad events which mark the pages of Oregon history.—Oregon Daily Journal.
